SOUTH GEORGIANS TO GET BIG PLUMS FROM FEDERAL PIE

Judge W. N. Spence Will Be Given Desirable Place in Department of Justice at Washington—Other Big Jobs

MANY APPOINTMENTS IN NEXT TWO WEEKS

James H. Andrews Will Succeed Marcellus Markham as Surveyor of Port at Atlanta, Journal's Prediction True

BY RALPH SMITH

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 7.—The following nominations of interest and importance to Georgia will be sent to the senate within the next ten days or two weeks by President Wilson:

Collector of the port at Savannah, David Barry, of Savannah, vice William R. Leaken.

SOUTHWEST GEORGIA PLEASED.

The announcement with reference to Joseph A. Davis and W. N. Spence, more especially the latter, will occasion much surprise and no less gratification in southwest Georgia. Senator Bacon announced that Davis would be named for marshal and Senator Smith gave out the statement relative to Spence's probable appointment as pardon attorney.

Judge Spence's name was first suggested by his friends for the marshalship for south Georgia, but his selection for a responsible post in Washington removed him from the field of possibilities and made clear the way for the nomination of Davis.

It may be stated that Davis opposed Senator Hoke Smith in all of his races for governor, but was among his supporters after the senate. Mr. Smith entered no objection to his selection by Senator Bacon, and his name will go to the department of justice next week for transmission to the White House and thence to the senate for confirmation.

As stated, Davis will succeed George F. White, of Macon, whose four-year term expired last December. White succeeded to the office nearly five years ago, upon the retirement of Captain John M. Barnes of Thomson. White is a native New Yorker, but has been active in Republican politics in Georgia for a number of years. He was renominated by President Taft last December, but failed of confirmation.

ANOTHER SURPRISE HERE.

The announcement by Senator Smith that Howard Thompson, of Gainesville, is to be nominated for district judge for the northern district of the state within a comparatively few days, will occasion hardly less surprise and no less gratification than announcements relative to Davis and Spence. The impression has been that Walter H. Johnson, the incumbent, had until next January to serve, and that no effort would be made to remove him before the expiration of his term.

It appears, however, that Johnson was first appointed marshal on June 23, fifteen years ago, succeeding Samuel Dunlap, of Gainesville, who was removed without reason. Attorney General McReynolds holds that Johnson's term of office should date from the date of his original commission and therefore his term expires on the 23rd of this month.

It has been known for months that Senator Smith would recommend the nomination of Thompson as successor to Johnson, but the statement today was the first official announcement to this effect.

Senator Smith announced on Thursday last, after an interview with the president, that the nomination of A. O. Blalock for internal revenue collector would be made in a few days.

The announcement that Dave Barrow, of Savannah, was slated for collector of the port of Savannah was published in the dispatches some time ago, and Senator Bacon's statement today is confirmatory of this prediction. Colonel J. J. O'Leary, of Savannah, was an applicant for this post and his friends believed at one time that he would be favored by Mr. Bacon.

ANDREWS FOR SURVEYSHIP.

The passage by congress of a bill to postpone the reorganization of the custom service until next year makes possible the appointment of James H. Andrews for surveyor of the port of Atlanta. Andrews is secretary of the Travelers' Protective association. The surveyorship has been held for many years by Marcellus Markham, a Republican. The office carries a salary of $1,000 a year and fees that make it around $5,000 a year.

Under the reorganized scheme perfected by the last administration the surveyor's office at Atlanta was to have been merged with the collectorship at Savannah, but congress has checked this wholesale abolition of federal plums.

There now remain only two statewide federal positions in Georgia to be filled. They are the district attorneyships for the northern and southern districts. It is known that Senator Smith probably will name Hooper Alexander for the northern district. Senator Bacon announced that he will urge the nomination of A. Pratt Adams, of Savannah, for the southern district. It is understood that Adams will not be nominated, and the contest for the office is believed to be among Robert L. Berner of Macon, John T. West of Thomson, Fred Saussy and R. M. Hitch of Savannah and J. Thomas Hill of Cordele.

"IF PEOPLE PUT IN A FIRSTCLASS COUNCIL I'LL SUPPORT BONDS"

Mayor Declares Present Council, by Its High-Handed Action on Charter, Showed Itself Unfit to Be Trusted

SAYS LAST BOND ISSUE WAS NOT SATISFACTORY

"People Haven't Forgot School Houses That Crumbled Before Occupied, and Basin That Wouldn't Hold Water"

In a ringing interview on the city's financial condition Mayor Woodward yesterday afternoon declared that if the people will elect a firstclass council he will not oppose a bond issue but on the contrary will actively support it.

The interview was somewhat by way of reply to Councilman Thomson's interview in The Journal Saturday afternoon, in which the councilman severely criticised the mayor for opposing bonds after (as Thomson says) getting the city in a situation where bonds are necessary.

Mayor Woodward said:

"I haven't said I was opposed to a bond issue. I said I didn't think the people will vote bonds for the present council to spend, and I haven't changed my mind.

"If the people will elect a good, firstclass council of business men I won't oppose bonds. I'll get out and work for them. But I'm not going to support bonds to be spent by the council we've got now.

"COUNCIL SLAPPED CITIZENS"

"Any body of men that will slap in the face a representative mass meeting of citizens, and disregard the request of more than 5,000 citizens who signed cards, are not in my opinion the type of men fit to be entrusted with the expenditure of millions of dollars.

"The mass meeting in the auditorium, and the 5,000 citizens who signed post cards, asked the privilege of voting on a new charter for the city of Atlanta, council turned them down flat.

"After such treatment of the people as that, I don't think council has any right to ask the people for anything, much less a bond issue of several million dollars.

"If council is not willing to trust the people to vote on the question of a city charter, then I'm with the people in their refusal to trust council with the expenditure of a bond issue.

THIRTEEN ELECTIONS IN HALL.

"This fall the terms of thirteen councilmen and three aldermen expire. I've got no candidate to offer and nobody's name to suggest. But I would like to see the people wake up and elect some business men that are competent to transact the city's business. It is time the people were taking more interest in their affairs. If the people had been careful to elect a better type of men to council the city wouldn't be in the fix it is now.

"And I'd like to say right here that the city isn't nearly so bad off as some of these calamity howling councilmen would have the public believe.

FAVORS CASH POLICY.

"I always have been and always will be in favor of the city living within its income. The city can do more with $100,000 cash than it can do with $150,000 on credit. The crematory contract plainly shows that one of the Destructor company's main arguments in favor of the high price was that it had to add the city on credit.

"If we can get the city out of debt—get all these odds and ends cleaned up that council after council has been accumulating in violation of the constitution of the state and the charter of the city—if we can do this, the city's current income will be sufficient to take care of special improvements, provided the money is judiciously and properly spent.

"LAST BONDS UNSATISFACTORY."

"As to a bond issue, there is a great deal of dissatisfaction over the last bond issue. The people haven't forgot those school houses that began to crumble before they were occupied, and that coagulating basin at the waterworks that leaked when they turned the water into it.

"But, as I said, I'm not against bonds if we had some firstclass bupiness men in council to spend the money."

RAPS COUNCILMAN THOMSON

Referring to Councilman Thomson, Mayor Woodward said:

"I notice Mr. Thomson in his interview says serving the city as councilman is a

DEMOCRATS' TARIFF WILL FACE NEW TEST TUESDAY

Senate Finance Committee to Get Ready for Its Own Debate

(By Associated Press.)

WASHINGTON, June 7.—Before the tariff bill gets to the senate Democratic caucus, where it will be submitted to the most severe test it must meet before its passage, it will have a preliminary try-out before the senate finance committee that promises to be most rigid.

Although the sub-committees have been at work on various schedules a month and are about to finish their work, it was said tonight that there would be opposition by Democrats in the finance committee to many changes. There is a prospect that some of the sub-committee recommendations may not be adopted.

Chairman Simmons, of the finance committee, tonight called a meeting of the majority members of his committee a meeting of the entire committee next the meting of the entire committee next week, but two of the sub-committees still are struggling with schedules and cannot complete their work before the middle of the week at the earliest. Senator Johnson's sub-committee will work tomorrow. If some schedules are reduced as much as is reported, a fight in committee seems certain.

The Johnson sub-committee today practically decided to keep the duty on cut diamonds at 10 or 15 per cent. The Underwood bill proposes 20. Diamond merchants filed briefs showing it was the opinion of customs officials that an increase of duty would increase smuggling.

The sub-committee also decided to modify the clause prohibiting the importation of plumage of wild birds, holding that it was too rigid and would shut out feathers of birds not protected in foreign countries. The amendment will not, however, admit aigrettes.

LAD OF THIRTEEN YEARS DROWNS AT WHITE CITY

While Bathing in Pleasure Lake Minor Jordan Sinks to His Death

A thirteen-year-old boy was drowned in the swimming pool at White city, Saturday afternoon. His name was Minor Jordan, the son of Mrs. Cora Furr, who lives on Howell street. It was the first drowning in an Atlanta lake this year, and the only one, so far as is known, that has ever occurred at White city.

Hot and anxious from an hour or more of skating at the White city rink, the little lad hurriedly took off his clothes in the bath-house and jumped into the lake to cool his hot body, streaming with perspiration. A half hour later they missed him, his chum, Howard Jordan, began a hurried search, and wading around the edge of the lake, stumbled across the drowned boy's body in the shallow water directly opposite the landing place.

For forty-five minutes Howard and several other boys worked over the body. At the end of that time a physician was called, but all means of restoration proved fruitless.

It is believed that the sudden plunge into the cool water while he was so hot, coupled with the fact that he had had no dinner save a half a biscuit, gave the boy a cramp. No one saw him go down, and he may have been under the water for a good thirty minutes before the body was found.

MOTHER IS PROSTRATED

When the news of the boy's death was told his mother late Saturday afternoon, she swooned and for hours afterward was prostrated. Lying on a bed in the front room of her home on Powell street, she could do nothing but moan and cry piteously for her little boy. A doctor was finally called to aid the grief-stricken mother.

Little Minor was for a long time a student at the Edgewood avenue school. About a month ago he stopped school and was helping his step-father, J. M. Furr, who drives an ice-wagon.

Mr. Furr says that he had asked the boy time and again not to go to White city or to the lake. Saturday afternoon, he says, about 1:30 o'clock, Minor told him he was going to play ball. The boy had eaten nothing except a piece of biscuit since breakfast, Mr. Furr says.

White city is about three-quarters of a mile from the home of young Minor. He reached the lake about 2 o'clock and spent the early part of the afternoon in the skating rink, where he was with his older brother, Howard Jordan, aged 20 years.

It was about 3:30 o'clock when Minor left the rink and hurried to get into the lake.

Friends of the little fellow say that he was just learning to swim. He asked one of his comrades to get him a piece of board on the other side of the pond, which is about fifty feet wide. The boy wouldn't get it, and Minor started around the lake after it.

MISSED BY COMRADES

The last time he was seen alive, his friends say, was just after he had started back across the lake pushing the board in front of him. About half an hour later some of the boys missed him.

They went up to the skating rink and told his brother that Minor couldn't be found. Howard Jordan and another boy, Fred Mayfield, his neighbor, ran down to the lake to look for the boy. His clothes lying on the bank gave them the first inkling of the tragedy.

Howard Jordan and young Mayfield at once donned bathing suits and began to search the lake. Nearly fifteen minutes had passed before Howard stumbled on his brother's body as he waded in the shallows around the edge. Whether the boy had gone down where his body was

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE TO BE REGENERATED NOW

BY RALPH SMITH

WASHINGTON, June 7.—Alexander H. Stephens, the organizer of the railway mail service in Alaska and the man who brought order out of chaos in the postal service in San Francisco following the earthquake and fire, today took the oath of office as general superintendent of the railway mail service, vice Theodore Ingalls of Kentucky, demoted and transferred to Cleveland as division superintendent.

Stephens' assumption of the office will be hailed with delight throughout the country, long suffering from a demoralized inefficient service. Nowhere more than in the south will the announcement be received with pleasure, alike by the public and by thousands of railway mail clerks. It will be accepted correctly as a forerunner of a disposition on the part of Postmaster General Burleson and his subordinates to place the railway mail service on an efficient basis. This service is the keystone of the arch upon which rests the whole postal system of the United States.

It is believed that Stephens, who, besides being a thoroughgoing efficient mail expert is also a strong Democrat, will reorganize the entire railway mail service. It is practically assured that a number of division superintendents will be transferred or demoted. It is equally certain that some of the chief clerks—the office men—who have made themselves thoroughly objectionable and established their incompetency, will be demoted or removed.

As was indicated in the dispatches a week or ten days ago, George W. Pepper, superintendent of the fourth division with headquarters at Atlanta, will, it is believed be transferred to another point and possibly demoted. His chief clerk, Rager, also will be transferred to another territory. It is not known who will succeed them.

The new general superintendent of the railway mail service is just as able as his name indicates, and his administration of the system will be just as satisfactory to the south. His namesake—Alexander H. Stephens—should sound especially good in Georgia.

Mr. Stephens, the new general superintendent of the mail service was born at Canton, Mo., February 1, 1866, but now claims legal residence at Oakland, California. He was educated in the private and public schools of his native town, and at the University of the Pacific. For three or four years he followed newspaper work as a reporter and in other capacities with California newspapers.

He entered the railway mail service, January 26, 1894, as a clerk in the Ogden and San Francisco railway postoffice, and was seriously injured while on duty, January 18, 1896. He was detailed to the office of the superintendent of the eighth division at San Francisco, October 1, 1898, and has filled every position in the service from that of substitute postal clerk to that of superintendent.

Mr. Stephens organized the first mail service in Alaska, in 1898, and his services in restoring mail facilities in California after the San Francisco earthquake are said to have been invaluable. In his new position he will have the direction of the mail over 268,118 miles of railway, employing 17,000 men, whose salaries aggregate $20,000,000 annually.

"Liar and Grafter," Say Colyar and Lanford In Answer to T. B. Felder

SAYS LANFORD CONSPIRED TO TAKE HIM TO S. C.

He Also Makes Another Personal Attack Upon Detective Chief—Declares Beavers Is Unfitted for His Office

Thomas B. Felder, the attorney who was dictographed by the city detectives, Saturday afternoon gave out open letters addressed to James R. Gray, editor of The Journal, Chief of Police James L. Beavers, and Chief of Detectives Newport A. Lanford. These letters purported to be an exposure of what Mr. Felder has characterized as the dictograph frame-up. The letter addressed to James R. Gray is largely an attack upon A. S. Colyar, the man who assisted the city detectives in dictographing Mr. Felder. In the letter to Chief Beavers, Mr. Felder declares that he has never charged the chief with being corrupt, but states that he regards him as unfitted for the office of chief of police. In the letter to Chief of Detectives Lanford, Mr. Felder again attacks that official's character and charges that he is in a conspiracy with Governor Cole Blease, of South Carolina, to kidnap Felder and carry him across the state line.

The communications as given out by Mr. Felder follow in-full:

LETTER TO MR. GRAY.

Atlanta, Ga., June 7, 1913.

Mr. James R. Gray,—

Editor and proprietor of The Atlanta Journal, Atlanta, Ga.

My Dear Dick:

Recent occurrences have rudely shocked my confidence in your professions of personal friendship for me. That you have in times past been my friend, I do not doubt; but for reasons best known to yourself, you have chosen to stifle every generous impulse of a lifetime and to exhibit towards me a spirit which I could not expect to find in my worst foe. Why your professed ardor should have cooled so suddenly and your cherished friendship should have passed so mysteriously into eclipse, is a riddle which I cannot quite solve, remembering your former enthusiastic protestations as I do. But for the rude jolts you have recently given an old acquaintance of nearly a quarter of a century, we might be preparing to celebrate the silver anniversary of our friendship; but instead of celebrating this event in our lives, I must bemoan the faults of one "Whose heart is treacherous, though his tongue drops manna"; but I am thankful to say that I have a host of friends whose friendship I treasure above rubies. They are as steadfast and as true as the north star, "Let the wind blow where it listeth." In the present, as in every crisis through which I have been called to pass, they have given me without stint and most unselfishly their loyal support and co-operation and I wear them where Hamlet wore Horatio. "In my heart's core." I also have my enemies—in the main, among the criminal classes whose venality and corruption a profound sense of public duty and my obligation has forced me to expose.

I might add that I prize my enemies scarcely less than my friends, for the possession of their enmity constitutes the very highest tribute to my character, both personal and professional. There are not a few of my friends who are bound to me, thank God, by "hooks of steel," because of the very enemies I have made.

CAN'T UNDERSTAND.

I will never understand, Dick, why you introduced in the columns of your paper, with the imprimatur of your sanction, the uncorroborated vaporings of the diseased mind of this mental humbug and moral pervert, A. S. Colyar, Jr., especially when the mass of putrid matter furnished you by him bore all of the earmarks of a wilful and deliberate forgery; also in view of the further fact that at least one other paper to which it was tendered, upon the score of which I had no claim except that of fair treatment, rejected it, upon the grounds—first, that the article carried upon its face the indubitable and unmistakable proof of an outrageous "frame-up," and second, that the tenderer was not a man, but a human monstrosity, without mental, moral or financial responsibility for his action. It is also a curious fact that the manager of the paper rejecting the proffered manuscript had no knowledge of Colyar's character, while you—so you informed me—knew him to be a "professional crook," who would sell out to one side as quickly as to the other. To cite evidence of this—his activities to sell in the "market overt" to the highest bidder for cash the fruits of his perjuries and forgeries have abated not one jot or tittle' since he palmed off on you the mass of putrefaction labeled by him, "Felder and Woodward Dictographed." As proof of this statement, Dick, let me call your attention to some of the things which he has offered in this market, since the publication of the alleged dictograph matter he claims to have sold to you. His offer has been declined, because it was not believed this his charges against you were true. I would not be a party to blacken the character of an enemy, much less a

SCATHING REPLIES MADE TO LETTERS ATTACKING THEM

Colyar Addresses Felder as "Dictograph Tommy" and "My Dear Co-conspirator in Crime"

SEND HIM TO CREMATORY, SAYS DETECTIVE CHIEF

J. R. Gray Said: "I Have No Comment to Make—Mr. Felder's Controversy Is With A. S. Colyar"

Replying to the open letters of Thomas B. Felder, attacking them, A. S. Colyar and Chief of Detectives N. A. Lanford last night gave to The Journal statements, denouncing Mr. Felder in unmeasured terms. Chief of Police James L. Beavers, who was also the subject of attack, was out of the city and, therefore, could not be given the opportunity to reply.

James R. Gray, when shown Mr. Felder's communication, addressed to him, said:

"I have no comment to make on Mr. Felder's letter. His controversy is with A. S. Colyar. I suppose Mr. Colyar will wish to reply."

The statements of A. S. Colyar and Chief Lanford follow below in full:

COLYAR'S REPLY.

T. B. Felder Esq., alias Dictograph Tommy.

Sir: As you let last Sunday go by without attempting to prostitute the Sunday press with some more of your hot air and denials, I had thought that perhaps some good friend of yours had given you a hint that even a braying ass can sometimes kill himself, and that you had probably decided to withdraw from a newspaper controversy, in my last letter that I wrote you I offered you what I have been told by many good citizens was a fair proposition, viz: To let five honorable gentlemen decide who had lied in the controversy at issue, and you declined to accept the proposition. I will make you a second proposition: I do not know a single member of the honorable supreme court of Georgia, but I am willing to let the chief justice of that honorable court appoint a committee of five honorable citizens, non-residents of the city of Atlanta, and let this committee decide whether you are guilty of unprofessional conduct and a violator of the criminal laws of Georgia, by offering a bribe of $1,000 to G. C. Febuary to steal the papers for you out of the safe, in the Phagan case, and I will only have one request to make of the honorable chief justice when he appoints the committee, and that is that he appoint men in no way connected with the whisky interests and the immoral classes, among whom you have so many clients. I was satisfied when I made you the last proposition that you would not accept it, although I made it in good faith, and I repeat, that you may eliminate me entirely as a witness before the committee, and I have the witnesses of unimpeachable character that will brand you before this committee as a bribe giver, a lobbyist and a grafter. I believe that the people of this fair city and state, with your record, as it was exposed from the pulpit by the Rev. Len G. Broughton in the Baptist Tabernacle in this city, who publicly denounced you as a lobbyist and a grafter. I have read your letter written this afternoon and addressed to the Hon. James R. Gray, editor and proprietor of The Journal. The clear purpose of that letter is a scurrilous attack upon me, although you have addressed Mr. Gray. I am no saint as I have told you before; I have done wrong in my youth

DEMOCRATS LIKELY TO CREATE ANOTHER OFFICE IN CABINET

Secretary of Public Works Will Be the Next New Cabinet Official to Sit on Board at White House

BY RALPH SMITH.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 7.—The next cabinet position to be created by congress will be the secretary of public works. So say a number of prominent public men, who have been watching with a good deal of interest the trend of public sentiment in the United States in favor of co-ordinating all the federal public works, as is the rule in France, Germany, Italy and other countries in Europe, and placing them in charge of a responsible executive department.

The recent appointment of a committee on good roads by the house of representatives, it is predicted, will eventually lead to this proposed cabinet position. It would not be surprising if the matter should take definite form next winter, in the regular session, and at the latest it will probably not go beyond the long session which will mark the middle of the Wilson administration.

The campaign of education that will follow the introduction of a bill will probably run along for several years; this has been the rule in the past; and then the new department will be created.

THE DEPARTMENT'S JURISDICTION.

Following is a partial list of the items that would naturally come under the jurisdiction of such a department, and whose growing importance will be a powerful aid in the enactment of the legislation.

The building of the Alaskan railways by the government. The plan now is to have the government do the work of construction and issue the necessary bonds. This work will require a number of years for performance, and at its completion the federal government must have a bureau in order to maintain a proper check upon the operations of the lines. The cost of the Alaskan railways will be approximately $40,000,000. Army engineers will do the work.

The maintenance of the Panama canal. It has been estimated that it will require $5,000,000 a year to operate the canal at a high standard of efficiency. This charge will be perpetual. Under the present arrangement, the war and navy departments divide the responsibility of the canal, and conflict of authority is inevitable.

Public buildings. The average annual appropriation for new public buildings is $15,000,000, and the work is done under the supervision of the secretary of the treasury, who is charged also with the responsibility of the upkeep of the buildings.

Army and navy departments construct buildings to the value of about $5,000,000 a year, for various purposes connected with their work. This construction is now in charge of departmental bureaus.

Indian reservations. Each year hundreds of thousands of dollars are expended in the construction of new buildings of various kinds on Indian reservations in the west. The work is done now under the direction of the commissioner of Indian affairs.

Good roads. "And last, but by no means least," as the speller at the circus would say, there is the question of good roads. The creation of a good roads committee by the house indicates that it will be not a great while before congress will decide upon a policy of road construction throughout the country, the states assisting, while the federal government is the general check of maintenance, for the sake of uniformity. It is believed that the annual expenditure will not be very large at first, but members of congress believe that in time the appropriations will amount to $100,000,000 a year.

WILL CO-ORDINATE IMPROVEMENTS

The purpose of the department of public works will be to co-ordinate all of this construction work under one responsible head. It is sure to come, say prominent men in both houses, and under favorable conditions it may come before the end of Wilson's first administration. At the latest, they say, it will come under that of his second administration. It may be added by way of parenthesis that the impression is general in Washington that Wilson will succeed himself.

There is much more reason for such a department, it is pointed out, than there was for the recently created department of labor, even for the department of commerce. The latter department is gradually coming around to a position where it is justifying itself. The former has yet to do so; its chief work will be to bring employers and employes into closer and more sympathetic co-operation. If this can be done, it will prove a blessing to the entire country.

That congress expects that the new road roads committee will soon become one of the important committees of the house, was evidenced by the wild scramble for places on it. Representative Shackleford of Missouri, gave up a place on the mighty ways and means committee to become its chairman. Others of the twenty-one members also gave up desirable committee places to take assignments to this committee, as, for instance, Representative Saunders, of Virginia, who resigned from the appropriations committee, and Representative, Byrnes, South Carolina, who gave up the banking and currency committee.

A KEEN DISAPPOINTMENT

It was not only a keen personal disappointment to some members of the Georgia delegation that they did not land on the roads committee, it was a blow to the state. There were, however, only fourteen Democratic places on the committee, and, under the terms of a binding agreement, these fourteen places were equally divided between the north and the south. Maryland, Missouri, Oklahoma and Kentucky are classified as southern states, bringing the total up to fourteen, and, obviously, it was impossible to make the seven places go round. Some states had to be left without direct representation on the committee. Georgia and Tennessee were among the number.

The new comittee will control all bills relating to road construction and maintenance, but the appropriations will be made by the appropriation committee, as is the case with rivers and harbors and public buildings. In time, it is believed that good roads will claim some of the money which, otherwise, would be expended for rivers and harbors and public buildings.

BASCOM H. TORRANCE, Boys' High school correspondent of The Journal during the past year, who has won the Greenleaf scholarship.

BASCOM H. TORRANCE TO ATTEND HARVARD

Bascom H. Torrance, high school correspondent for the school page of The Journal, was awarded the Greenleaf scholarship of $200 to Harvard university at the graduating exercises of the Boys' High school Friday night, and he will attend the Cambridge institution next year.

He will be one of a number of high school boys who have made Harvard their alma mater. In the past five years three boys have gone straight from high school to Harvard, Hugh Fuller, James C. Manry and Howell Foreman. The last named is now in the freshman class at the university.

Torrance made an enviable record at high school, graduating with highest honor and receiving the Holzman medal for scholarship. He was also valedictorian of his class.

He is the son of H. W. Torrance, of 359 Ponce de Leon avenue.

When all efforts to revive him had failed, several of his comrades departed to break the news to his people. Mr. Furr was found not far from the house and was told of the tragedy. It was left to him to inform Minor's mother.

The body was taken in charge by Harry G. Poole and funeral arrangements will be announced later. Minor is survived by his mother and stepfather anr fourth brothers, Fred, Frank, Howard and Sam Jordan. The dead boy was the youngest son.

So far as is known, this is the first drowning that has ever happened at White city. The lake there is a small one, and has only been open for a few weeks.

19 OFFICIALS OF MINE WORKERS ARE INDICTED

President White and Eighteen Others Accused by Federal Jury

CHARLESTON, W. Va., June 7.—President John P. White and eighteen other officials of the United Mine Workers of America, were indicted in the federal court here today on a charge of violating the Sherman anti-trust law.

It is alleged that the defendants conspired with the coal operators of western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois to raise wages in the West Virginia coal fields, so as to prevent their competition with other states.

ESTABLISHES PRECEDENT.

It is said here that this case is the first one in which officers of labor organizations have been indicted on charges of having violated the Sherman anti-trust law.

The indictments charge that the ninety men engaged in a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce." The offense is said to have started September 1, 1912, and continued since.

It is charged that the indicted men have been agents and members of "an unincorporated voluntary organization of individual as a labor union known as the United Mine Workers of America, having many thousands of members who unlawfully combined and conspired together with the object and intent of unionizing and making membersof said organization the laborers employed in and around the coal mines of the state of West Virginia in order that and with the intent that said organization, by resulting the wage to be paid to said laborers for their work, could and would fix and control the price at which the coal mined in the western part of Pennsylvania and in the states of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, in the markets of the states of the United States outside of West Virginia."

THE ALLEGATIONS

The indictment alleged that coal produced in West Virginia is shipped in competition with coal mined in the other states of the competitive field and that not more than 15 per cent of the coal output of West Virginia is consumed within the state.

"The object and purpose of the United Mine Workers is to fix wages to be paid to laborers and to refuse to allow said laborers to work unless said wages are paid," the complaint further reads. Continuing it is stated:

"The organization intends to unionize the miners in West Virginia, and, if successful o fix the price at which coal of West Virginia could be sold in the outside markets named, thus permitting the competitive states to compete more favorably in the western markets with the product shipped from West Virginia."

It is charged that the mines in the competitive states are unionized, dominated by the United Mine Workers and the coal operators of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois have entered "into a combination and conspiracy with the miners' union wherein the alleged conspiratoors have agreed to prohibit the coal mined in West Virginia from entering the lake markets and Canada."

Those named in the indictments are: John P. White, president; Frank J. Hayes, vice president; Thomas Haggerty, Joseph Vasy, James Cantrell, Charles Hatley, Marco Roman, George H. Edmonds and Benjamin F. Morris.

thankless job—that it requires a lot of work with a lot of criticism in return, etc. Well, if Mr. Thomson will just confine himself to those few and insignificant committee assignments which I gave him, he will not find himself overworked. It seems, however, that he doesn't, but attends a lot of committee meetings of which he is not a member. This 'work' is therefore voluntary on his part, and if he insists on doing it, he ought not to kick."

LONDON, June 7.—At the luncheon given by King George in honor of the Balkan peace delegates today, his majesty expressed the hope that their labors soon will be concluded satisfactorily. At a subsequent meeting of the delegates however, little progress was made and a adjournment was taken to Monday. The delegates failed to reach an agreemnt con the form of draft protocol.

King George, conevrsing with the delegates regarding the danger of fresh struggles among themselves, remarked that another war would be a crime against humanity.

DR. W. H. KNIGHT of East Bangor, Mass., writes: "My wife was down with Consumption, when I ordered the Lloyd treatment. She was very weak from night sweats, cough, and in a feverish condition. I mailed a charge for the letter after ten days' treatment, and from that time on up to three months, when the cure was complete. The Lloyd treatment kills the Tubercle Bacillus in the blood and tissue, and it is the only remedy so far discovered that will do this. It is a preventive as well as a cure. It should be used by those who are run down, or those who fear the approach of Consumption. It can be truthfully said that for the cure and prevention of Consumption, it is the most wonderful treatment of the present age."

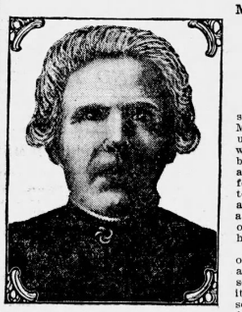
"Refused Substitute"

"The Genuine, DUFFY'S, a Blessing"



Miss M. Stroud, 67 years old, refused to be fooled by substitutor. She knew the value of Duffy's from personal experience as well as having it highly recommended by her family physician.

"A short time ago I went into a store and asked for Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey. The clerk did his utmost to sell me another malt whiskey which he represented was better or at least 'just as good' as Duffy's. I became very angry for I knew his reason for trying to sell me a substitute for an article that was so well known and popular and so highly recommended by physicians and hospitals all over the world.

"This store is one like some others that sell a well advertised and popular article at cost, and sometimes less than cost, using it as a bait. Then they try to sell the customer their own unknown article at the same price, an extra profit, and often when it is an article of food or drink, this extra profit is made at the expense of the customer's health.

"I am now over 67 years old and for many years I have used

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

I was advised by my doctor to take it three times a day before meals as I had a hacking cough. After ten days I noticed that my appetite increased wonderfully and it also helped my digestion, and I have not been troubled with a cough or indigestion since.

"My doctor says Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is a pure, unadulterated and excellent remedy. He says that taken as a medicine and as directed by a physician it is a blessing to mankind." Margaret Stroud, 1942 E. Allegheny Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa.

Be sure to get DUFFY'S—It's Reliable.

The genuine Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is sold in SEALED BOTTLES ONLY, by druggists, grocers, dispensaries and dealers. Should our friends for any reason be unable to secure it in their locality, We will have it shipped to them from their nearest dealer, express prepaid (cash to accompany order) at the following prices:

WHY YOU SHOULD USE PLENTY OF ANSWERS

So many of our contestants seem to think that holding down to one or two answers on each picture is the surest way to win, that we will try to explain once more why that is not the right way to win.

Each of the 75 pictures are drawn to clearly represent the title of one book, as the members of The Journal staff who order those pictures drawn see them. Now you all know that no two or three people would look at the pictures in the same light and it isn p to you to study them out from all angles and sumbit ALL the likely answers you can find in the Catalogue to fit those pictures. You know the rules allow you as many as ten on each picture and your cue is to use the full ten where you think it necessary. Remember that the Grand Prize winner in last year's Journal Booklovers' Campaign used 554 answers. Do you think she would win the first prize if she held down to one or two answers on each picture instead of ever seven on each one?

We do not know of a Booklovers' Campaign where the Grand Prize was carried off by a contestant holding down too low on answers.

Exercise all your rights to extra answers and do not let the fear of a tie keep you out of the winning.

At the close of every Campaign the Editor receives letters from Contestants who explain that in their eagerness to hold down to one or two answers on each picture they eliminate from ten to twenty correct answers from their list, thus placing themselves down in the Candy class or eliminating themselves from the prize winning list entirely.

Don't do that in this Campaign. Let the other fellow do it if he wants to, but make up YOUR mind that you want some of the $2,500 in gold and not a box of candy. With the Answer Book giving you the right to ten answers on each picture there is no excuse to hold down low on answers.

SOLICITOR MAKES NO REPLY TO MRS. FRANK

Hugh M. Dorsey Has No Comment to Make on Mrs. Frank's Letter

Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey has declined to make any answer to the published statement of Mrs. Leo M. Frank, charging him with allowing the use of "torture" to force people to make false statements against her husband, who is charged by a grand jury indictment with the murder of Mary Phagan.

In her statement Mrs. Frank flayed the solicitor general, charging that it is evident from his card that he believes that he is perfectly justifiable in using testimony procured from witnesses by torture.

While the statement of the accused man's wife is directed at the solicitor general, she pays her respects to the city detectives in no uncertain terms, and she speaks often or the "detectives' torture chamber."

According to the authorities there have been no recent developments in the Phagan murder investigation, and the state and the defense are both lending their energies towards preparation for the trial of Frank, which will be fixed for June 30, it is said.

The trial is certain to be a tremendous legal battle, and it is probable that several attorneys will be engaged to assist Luther Z. Rosser and Herbert Haas in the defense and the solicitor general in the prosecution. Both Mr. Dorsey and Mr. Rosser decline to discuss in any way their preparations for the trial.

Y. W. C. A. QUARTERS ARE IN WESLEY MEMORIAL

The Young Woman's Christian association has temporary headquarters on the fourth floor in the Wesley Memorial church building.

The rest room and office are comfortable and inviting and the assembly room adjoining is light, airy and spacious.

The organization is in fine condition at present. In projecting new and beautiful plans for future usefulness, its officers have taken occasion to acknowledge that the vantage point from which the new administration starts is due to the efficient services of Mrs. James Jackson, the retiring president. For five years Mrs. Jackson has served as leader.

She leaves to the new administration an association residence strategically located, increasing in value daily, and the association, with its various departments is entirely free from debt. As Mrs. Jackson declined re-election, the board made her honorary president for life, bestowing the same honor upon Mrs. A. McD. Wilson, another ex-president.

At the last meeting of the board it was decided that the Atlanta association shall avail itself of the expert advice which the national association offers, and have a trained worker visit Atlanta and help in planning the occupancy of the wide field for usefulness which Atlanta offers. No other organized body of Christian social workers is so well qualified by experience and training to cope with the problems of the city's obligation to its young business women.

WANTS TO COME HERE TO SAVE HIS SIGHT

Fearing, as he says, that the climate and acute sunlight of the Lone Star state will hasten his fast-approaching blindness, S. C. Townsend, an inmate of the Confederate Soldiers' home at Austin, Tex., has written to Captain W. H. Harrison, secretary of the Georgia Confederate Soldiers' home, asking that arrangements be made to transfer him to the latter.

Mr. Townsend says that he is a South Carolinian and fought in one of the regiments of the Palmetto state. He thinks the Georgia climate will be beneficial to him.

Captain Harrison has written Mr. Townsend advising him that under the Georgia laws establishing the Confederate Soldiers' home, no veteran can be admitted to that institution who has not resided in the state since 1895.

HONOR CADETS AT THE GEORGIA MILITARY ACADEMY

Top: Leonard C. Parker, winner of Blount medal for best record as officer, and L. M. Sevell, winner of medal for best shot. Bottom pictures: Albert Selig, winner of Woodward medal, and William Burch, winner of Castleman medal for excellence in drill.

Among the cadets of the Georgia Military academy to receive special honors at the close of the session were Leonard C. Parker, of Americus, Ga., who won the Blount medal for the best all around officer during the year. Cadet Parker was captain of company C, and the winning of this medal carries with it the highest efficiency in conduct, military service, class room work, and all around athletic patricipations.

Major Lester M. Savell again won the Blount medal for the best average on the target range. Twice in succession Mr. Savell has won this medal, and unquestionably his success in this will lead to further achievements in the National Guard or the regular army.

William Burch, of Dublin, Ga., won the Castleman medal for the best individual drill in the manual of arms.

Albert Selig, of Atlanta, won the president's medal, which was a beautiful seal ring, for the best original oration and delivery.

George Towns, of Cuba, was awarded a beautiful medal by an unknown friend in the city of Atlanta for being the model young man in Christian endeavor work in the cadet corps for the year.

Altogether the Georgia Military academy has closed its most brilliant year, and preparations are already under way for the making of the next year, a greater success than ever. Colonel Woodward has spared no pains in organizing into the faculty the strongest and most effective school workers possible to be obtained.

MISSOURI OFFICER ASKS SHOWDOWN ON INSURANCE

ST. LOUIS, June 7.—Insurance Commissioner Revelle Monday will issue citations against the fire insurance companies that have ceased writing policies in Missouri to show cause for their refusal to issue insurance in this state. The companies will have ten days to show why their Missouri licenses should not be revoked. Mr. Revelle today said the inability to get insurance is felt more in rural communities than in the large cities. Country banks, he said, have foreclosed mortgages because borrowers have been unable to obtain a renewal of insurance on mortgaged property.

"If the old companies are unwilling to assume the risks under the Orr law, I am in a position to guarantee Missourians that they will be able to secure all the insurance they want from new companies," said Mr. Revelle.

CHILD IS INJURED; FALLS ON LAWN MOWER

Falling upon a lawn mower, which was being operated by his older brother, John Royal Callaway, the two-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. W. I. Callaway, 177 Oakland avenue, was painfully injured Saturday afternoon, his index finger on his right hand being severed.

The finger was replaced by physicians in the hope of the wound healing.

NEGRO IS FATALLY SHOT BY PAIR OF HOLD-UP MEN

Shot arough the stomach by a pair of negro footpads, Will Holmes, colored, is dying at the Grady hospital as the result of an affray at Juniper and Eighth streets last night.

According to the police Holmes undertook to resist the hold-up men, who escaped upon him from an alleyway, and was shot fatally without parley. His two assailants escaped.

MEDICINE MAN STRICKEN WITH HEART FAILURE

Dr. L. F. Johnson, Who Ran Two Medicine Shows, Fell Dead Saturday

Seated at a dining table with his wife in his rooms at the New Terminal hotel, Dr. L. F. Johnson, of Guthrie, Ky., was suddenly seized with an attack of heart failure Saturday afternoon about 4 o'clock, and died before a physician could reach him.

Dr. Johnson had been in the city for about a month, and sold patent medicines. He conducted two shows; one on Decatur street and one on Peters street. He had just come into the hotel from his work, and had sat down to dinner with his wife. He suddenly fell back in his chair, gasping for breath. Mrs. Johnson at once gave the alarm, and became frantic when she realized his condition. The manager of the hotel was one of the first to reach the room, and discovered at once that Dr. Johnson's pulse had stopped beating. He was dead then.

The coroner was summoned, but decided to hold no inquest. The wife said her husband's parents had both died of heart failure, and her husband had known for some time that he was afflicted in the same manner. He had a hemorrhage Saturday morning, one of his fellow showmen told the coroner, but insisted on working.

The deceased was thirty-five years old. He had made many friends since his residence at the hotel. He leaves a widow and one son, Hunter, aged ten. The body was removed to Greenberg & Bond company's undertaking parlors, and will be taken to Kentucky for burial.

COULDN'T UNDERSTAND ATLANTA'S GROWTH

Senator Paul Klein, as well as the balance of the party who came here Friday with Governor Hodges, of Kansas, has become a real Atlanta booster.

Senator Klein said Saturday morning that they had heard all about Atlanta, especially through the press of the west since the Presbyterian assembly. He had read articles and editorials by C. F. Scott, of Iowa City, Kan., woh was one of the delegates. Mr. Scott pictured Atlanta and the southern hospitality in the most glowing terms, according to Senator Klein, but with even that the senator announced Saturday morning that half had not been told.

"We couldn't realize that you had suc ha population here as found. We had heard of Atlanta, of course, but we thought it was a city of about 100,000 people, and we have found the population twice as much."

Another member of the party is Colonel J. N. Harrison, commander of the Grand Army of the Republic in Kansas. He fought in the battles of Atlanta, and is very anxious to go over the old battlefields before he returns. "There were hot times during those days," Colonel Harrison declare, as he describes the strenuous times of the battles around Atlanta.

STORY ABOUT PET DOG ABSURD, SAYS MRS. DUPRE

The Journal is requested to correct an account which appeared in its columns Friday relative to the death of a pet poodle belonging to Mrs. J. N. DuPre, of 42 Hendrix avenue. There is just enough truth in the story as published to make it ridiculous in the extreme, says Mrs. DuPre.

Mrs. DuPre declares that she had met with fraud from a negro at a local stable, who represented himself over the phone as a white man, and asked the aid of the police to punish the fraud.

As Investment Diamonds Have Paid 10% Per Annum for Years

This fact is easily shown by tracing diamond history from 1807, since when diamonds have more than doubled in value.

Reasons for these advances are obvious. Fewer stones are being found, and finer stones rarer. Mining machinery has become obsolete on account of the greater depth of the mines. The native miners have recognized their value, and are demanding higher wages, and a radical increase in wages has been demanded and obtained by the diamond cutters.

In December 1908 we begun calling attention to the probable rapid increase in diamond values, since when there have been several material advances, and during last few months, the Diamond Syndicate made advances on rough diamonds, which increased the value of the finished product about 12 per cent.

Anticipating this advance we made large contracts with the cutters during the early summer season, and we are giving our customers the benefit of these prices, though it will be necessary for us to increase our prices after our present large stock is exhausted.

Exclusive Diamond Merchants, our whole time is given to the one idea of value. Our large purchases enable us to buy direct from larger cutters of the world, and our careful grading and classing, together with our positive guarantee of cash return and exchange value assures your investment.

Our mail order department is a perfect system, and your business and correspondence will be given the most careful attention.

We will be glad to mail you our Diamond Books Set No. 5 upon request.

BABY'S WELFARE REASON FOR RELEASING MOTHER

Woman Who Prefers Stockade to Martha Home Owes Liberty to Matron

Pleading for the welfare of a seventeen-months-old baby, Mrs. Mary Bohnefeld, police matron, last night saved Mrs. F. J. Rathnow, 250 Kirkwood avenue, from a stockade term of twenty-nine days. Mrs. Rathnow is one of the young women who recently told Recorder Broyles that she preferred the stockade to the Martha home.

When Mrs. Bohnefeld learned that Mrs. Rathnow was the mother of a child that needed her constant attention, the police matron prevailed upon the recorder to reduce the woman's fine from $25.75 to $15.75, an amount which she could pay.

With tears of gratitude for Mrs. Bohnefeld in her eyes, the young woman left police headquarters last night promising not to be locked within its walls again.

Mrs. Rathnow was arraigned with Mrs. Elma Colley and both, on being given their choice between the stockade and the Martha home, elected the former without hesitation. Recorder Broyles sentenced them each to pay a fine of $25.75 or serve twenty-nine days.

R. O. COCHRAN SPEAKS TO CHAPEL HILL VOTERS

It Was His Opening Gun in His Campaign for U. S. Senator

In an address before a good sized crowd at Chapel Hill, Douglas county, Ralph O. Cochran, representative-elect from Fulton county and candidate for the United States to succeed Senator Hoke Smith in 1914, fired the first gun of his campaign Saturday afternoon. Mr. Cochran was introduced by W. J. Camp.

In his speech Mr. Cochran declared for a platform of conservatism, and took a stand against radical reform. He declared his attitude toward reforms of all sort to be one for a gradual change which would not interfere with business operations or the natural course of things. Reforms of sweeping nature, such as a sweeping change of the tariff rates, he believes, are much worse than no reform.

G. A. R. Commander Points Significance Of Old Guard's Visit

Commander Alexander M. Ferris, of Edward Kinsley post, G. A. R., Boston, has sent a remarkable communication to Colonel J. F. Burke, commanding the Old Guard, describing the great significance which Bostonians attached to the Old Guard's visit.

Commander Ferris says in part:

"Before the inspiration can grow dull, and the honor and gladness your visit brought to our city and the Edward W. Kinsley post, No. 113, G. A. R., has been dimmed by time, I desire to express to you and each individual member of the Old Guard, an dwith your approval, most particularly to those who could not be present with us on that memorable reunion, who we must believe would have been with us if possible, our great appreciation of the distinguished honor you have conferred upon us.

"As youngsters, guided by the principles inspired by our home environment, we quarreled, fought, and both of us got whipped good and plenty; as men we are reconciled to the flat of a divine Providence which doeth all things well.

"The photos you sent me of yourself and three comrades, I desire to keep. They will be framed and grace the walls of our headquarters.

ORGAN CONCERT TODAY DEVOTED TO SCHUMANN

Atlanta Music Festival Association Will Celebrate Composer's Birthday

Atlanta music lovers will celebrate this afternoon at the auditorium free concert, the anniversary of the birth of the famous composer, Robert Schumann, whose "Traumerei" has made his name a beloved household word all over the world. The concert by the city organist, Percy J. Starnes, under the auspices of the Atlanta Music Festival association will be devoted entirely to works of this gerat composer.

Robert Alexander Schumann was born June 8, 1810, at Zwickau in Saxony. He was the youngest son of Friedrich August Gottlieb Schumann (born 1771), a bookseller, whose father was a clergyman in Saxony. His father took a lively interest in Belles Lettres, and was himself known as an author. He promoted his son's leanings toward art in every possible way, with which, however, his mother seems to have had no sympathy. In the small provincial town wheer Schumann spent the first eighteen years o this life, there was no musician capable of helping him beyond the mere rudiments of his art. There was a talented town musician, who for several decades was the best trupeter in the district, but as was commonly the case, he practiced his art simply as a trade. The organist of the Marenkirche, J. G. Kunzsch, Schumann's first pianoforte teacher, after a few years declared that his pupil was able to progress alone, and that his instructions might cease. He was so impressed with the boy's talent that when Schumann subsequently resolved to devote himself to art, Kuntzsch prophesied that he would attain to fame and immortality, and that in him the world would possess one of its greatest musicians.

The program for this afternoon is as follows:

Evening music. Op. 99. Allegretto scherzoso. Op. 99.

Etudes Symphoniques (Finale) Op 13.

The hour for the concert has been changed from 3:30 to 4 o'clock.

Next Sunday the Atlanta Festival Chorus will assist in the concert, their last appearance prior to their disbandment for the summer.

WESTERN UNION TYPIST BREAKS ALL RECORDS PERFORATING MESSAGES

Miss Jennie Vandegriff on Her First Trial Turns Out 1,003 Messages in Eight Hours, Keeping Three Wires Busy

Miss Jimmie Vandigriff, of the automatic department of the Western Union Telegraph company, has been given a gold medal for breaking all records for perforating messages. This young lady perforated 1,003 messages in eight and one-quarter hours, and durin gthat time kept three wires busy.

The perforator in a telegraph office has the same keyboard as the typewriter, but perforates messages on a piece of paper ribbon. For some time past it had been the custom of different divisions of the Western Union to send the best records established on the perforator to all the other offices.

B. F. Ragsdale, chief operator, suggested to Miss Vandigriff that she try her hand, telling her to do so when she thought she felt rested. She chose the next day, after dancing all night. She rattled off over 1,000 messages, without making a single mistake.

She uses only the index finger of each hand, except occasionally she will bring the second finger into play.

"When I learn to use all my fingers, I think I can get up some speed," was the smiling remark Miss Vandigriff made, as she quit the machine.

She was warmly congratulated by her fellow employes, who presented her with a large bouquet of flowers as a token of their esteem.

PERIL OF THE FLY IS TOLD GRAPHICALLY BY SCHOOL MISS

First Prize Composition by Miss Alice Cooper in Chamber of Commerce Contest Sounds Striking Warning Against Most Deadly of All Things

The following first prize competition on "Fly Prevention" was written by Miss Alice R. Cooper, of 155 Peeples street, a pupil in first grade B of the Girls' High school. It is one of the several which were announced recently as having won the awards offered by the Atlanta chamber of commerce. Dr. Claude A. Smith, city bacteriologist, is chairman of the committee which supervised the competition.

Miss Cooper's composition follows:

"'Baby bye, here's a fly;
Let us watch him, you and I.'

"Flies have been heard of ever since the beginning of history. The ancients appreciated a god for them, which was called Baal-Zebub. This later developed into Belzebub, and came to be used as it is now. The Bible speaks of the plague of flies which infested Egypt, so that we know that people have always dreaded them. Not until recently, however, have they realized how dangerous the fly really is. It causes more deaths than any other one thing.

"It is a very insignificant looking little thing. Its two transparent wings remain in the same position all the time, for it cannot fold them as most winged creatures can. It has six long, slender, black legs. On the bottom of each hand, which, when pressed to any surface, will let out a kind of glue. Every time the fly takes a step this sticky liquid comes out and enables it to stand. That is why flies are able to walk upside down on the ceiling. Flies have a very acute sense of smell. Each little brown head is covered with thousands of lenses. They reflect from the front, back and sides, so that the fly can see in every direction. This insect, like the bee, seems to be entirely deaf, for it pays no attention to any sound.

HOW IT GROWS.

"Every fly begins its life as a small white egg, lying, with 119 others, in a garbage can, manure pile, or some other insanitary place. The eggs usually hatch in about twelve hours. Out come tiny worms, or maggots, seeking for food. They eat whatever they can find, all the while gradually getting larger. After twenty-four hours, they shed their skins, and begin growing again.

This is repeated, and the larvae grow for three or four more days. At the end of that time they close themselves in cases of skin, which harden, and become a brownish red. For four days the insect grows inside its chrysalis. Then it comes out, and in a few moments is able to use its wings. The age of a fly can never be determined by its size, for each one reaches its maturity while in the pupa, or shell. Small flies are not babies, but simply a different kind from the large ones.

"The female fly lays 120 eggs every ten days. During its lifetime of a few weeks, one fly can furnish about half a thousand to take its place when it dies.

"During the winter months, the fly retires into some warm place, and lies there, without food, as a bear sleeps in his den in winter. On warm days it comes out, but hardly ever manages to find its way back to the nest, and dies of cold. The pupae, which have been formed in the fall, remain firm and warm until spring. Then the young flies come out, and begin their work of destruction.

HOW IT SPREADS DISEASE.

"The reason that the fly spreads so many diseases, is that it has almost no preference as to taste. It will feed on the most unclean things, and then fly to our table delicacies at the first opportunity. Sweets are not its favorite food, as is sometimes supposed. It would rather alight on a cream pitcher than feast on honey or syrup.

"We must take pains that the fly does not fall into our cream pitchers, or walk over our daily bread. We can never know where a fly has been. It may have come straight from a garbage can to crawl over a baby's face. During the Spanish-American war, flies were discovered walking over the soldiers' food with something white on their feet. It was found that they had just before been on the lime, which had been sprinkled on the ground to prevent disease. The soldiers did not know any more than we do where the flies come from. As a result, the soldies whose mess tents were not screened, had many more cases of sickness than the officers, whose food was protected from the flies.

"Typhoid fever, especially, is spread in this way. During the Boer war, the British soldiers suffered much from that sickness. It was noticed that in the cooler part of the summer, when the flies wer comparatively few, the number of cases of typhoid fever diminished. Also, in the fall, when the flies disappeared, the disease ceased to spread.

HOW TO STOP HAVOC.

"The best way to stop these deaths caused by flies is to prevent the hatching of the young ones. Nothing should be allowed to remain about a house which would furnish a breeding place. Garbage cans and boxes should be kept covered, and cleaned often. Manure should be screened or sprinkled with lime. Stables should be furnished with wire windows and doors, so that flies cannot lay eggs there. If the inside of a house is clean, they will not be liable to choose it as a place for the hatching of their young flies.

"We should do everything in our power to keep flies out of our houses. Every window and door should be screened, especially in the dining room and kitchen. Food should not be left uncovered, for that attracts flies. Grocery stores and butcher shops, delivery wagons and fruit peddler drays, should all be wired and kept as clean as our kitchen tables.

Sick rooms, especially those containing patients with typhoid fever, contagious diseases, and tuberculosis, should always be securely protected from flies. If a fly should enter the room, it should never be allowed to remain alive. In this way the spread of disease would to a great extent be stopped.

HOW TO KILL THEM.

'In order to kill flies that have made their way into a house it will be well to use a fly poison. Two teaspoonfuls of formaldehyde i na pint of water, ofrm a solution that is strong enough to kill a fly, but not liable to poison a person. If it is placed in shallow saucers about the house, some of the flies will porbably drink it, and die. The old fashioned fly paper is still used successfully, though some times the flies seem to realize the danger, and avoid it. They may also be gotten rid of by the burning of pyrethrum powder in a room. This stuns them and causes them to fall to the floor. They must then be gathered up and disposed of.

"In several cities it has been proved that the fly spreads almost all diseases, and especially typhoid fever. In Manhattan borough the death rate from typhoid fever was very high. A committee was appointed for investigation. It was found that the wharves bred millions of flies, which carried disease germs to the inhabitants of that district. Traps were set for the flies. The places in which the greater number of flies were found invariably had proportionately higher death rates. By remedying the unhealthful conditions the number of deaths was greatly reduced.

"Atlanta has a very high death rate; yet we boast that she is an up-to-date city in every respect. Our obligation toward the welfare of our city does not end with the expulsion of flies from our houses. We must teach the ignorant classes the deadliness of the fly, and show them how to destroy it."

Comfort Under Affliction

Newton Thomas in Role of Marshall's Secret Service Man

Newton S. Thomas is well known to friends in Atlanta as a seller of lots and sich. To everybody between Asheville, N. C., and Chattanooga, Tenn., he has the reputation of a guardian of statesmen, a personal conductor of vice presidents.

It all happened when Mr. Thomas and Thomas C. King, a traveling man from Anniston, Ala., were returning Thursday from a trip to Asheville. In the same drawing room car with them was Thomas R. Marshall, vice president of these United States, on his way to Nashville, Tenn.

Now vice presidents are sociable souls as well as other folk, and it was natural enough that Mr. Marshall, Mr. King and Mr. Thomas should start discussing with each other the weather, the tariff, the chances of the Yanks and other questions of the day.

The negro porter was responsible for the rest. He realized at once that the two gentlmen conversing so affably with the vice president must be secret service men. Through the train he went, tipping off everybody he could to the fact that "the gen'men with Mistah Marshall was p'licemens."

That is why Mr. Thomas and Mr. King were the recipients of stares, questions, until the train pulled into Chattanooga.

Ever Meet Hoop Snake Coming Down Road; This Farmer Did

A few days ago one road near Marietta, Ga., J. A. Swafford, a farmer, saw a hoop come rolling gently down the highway toward him. He rubbed his eyes and look again, for there was no one who could have started it going.

A few feet from him the hoop straightened out, hit the dust, and started to crawl into the bushes. Mr. Swafford pursued and grabbed a waving tail. He hadcaptured a hoop or horn snake, a specie of reptils more rare than the woo-woo bird and generally found in books about negro mythology or delirium tremens.

He has the hoop snake caked at his home now. Saturday he brought it to town and showed it to Lee Worsham, state entomologist at the capitol. Mr. Worsham has one specimen of the hoop snake pickledin alcohol, but it was the first live one that had been shown him in many a long day.

The snake is twenty-nine inches long and at its biggest point is three inches in diameter. The head is narrow, and is evidentquite different from that of any rentile with poisonous fangs. About six inches from the head it appears that the two parts of the body are tolned in a dove-tailed section.

The reptile is beautifully marked. On top he is colored a dark crimson brown, beneath a pure white. Along either side run narrow stripes of black and white, every few inches patterned with a sort of rosette-like scall paper.

At the end of his tail is the horn which gives the snake its name, a hard piece of skin about three-quarters of a inch long. This horn, the old-timers say, is the snake's means of defense.

When angered the horn snake stiffens its body they will tell you, puts the horn in its mouth in a sort of spit-ball effect and strikes out vicioush with it. Whether the reptile squirts quite a little strychnine on it, is nit known.

The negroes say that the snake puts this horn in his mouth, formine a hoop, and rolls down hil levery time he foes on a visit. He will pursue his enemies in this manner, striking out with a few feet away and launchhima elf forward, impaling anything in front with the horn.

This gives rise to the story thata hoop snake once pursued a man until the latter was forced to climb a tree.

The snake came bowling along about thirty miles an hour, and hit the tree with a vicious smack. The horn went clean through and his snakeship was stuck.

But the poison worked rapidly, filtered through the tree trunk, and reached the man, poisoning him instantly. The man fell down, the tree died, and withered away, and the hoop snake feasted on the remains.

BARBECUES KEEP 'EM BUSY IN MILLEDGEVILLE JUST NOW

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., June 7.—Milledgeville is in a maze of barbecues, according to enumerators of notable feasts of this kind pulled off here during the past week and those scheduled for the coming week.

On Wednesday a large crowd enjoyed a fish fry and barbecue at Camp creek, near here, and on the same date the local lodge of Elks entertained several distinguished Georgians at a barbecue at Treanor's. Among those present were James B. Nevin, of the Atlanta Georgian; John C. Reese, of the Macon Telegraph and Augusta Chronicle; J. Frank Rhodes, ex-mayor of Athens; Lee Worsham, state entomologist; Captain Shades Hawes, of Thomson; William H. Burwell, of Sparta; Thomas H. Fleming, of Sparta; Judge John T. Allen, of Milledgeville, and Clayton W. Robson, besides a large part of the membership of the Elks' club.

Thursday Cheops club, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, had one of the finest barbecues of the season in McKinley's woods, near Treanor's, and one of the most delightful repasts of the year was served. In addition to members of the local Shrine club, a special car came over from Macon bringing over a score of the Nobles. On Saturday George W. Hollinshead, Jr., entertained the members of the Progressive Farmers' club with a large barbecue and fish fry on his fine farm seven miles below the city.

Next Friday the Baldwin Blues, under command of Captain J. H. Ennis, will enjoy a barbecue at the rifle range, two miles out of the city, and this occasion promises to be a notable one also.

If any city in Georgia can surpass this town in barbecues it will have to stir up a considerable record. And the barbecue season has only started, say those who are in touch with the situation.

The action of this remarkable remedy is just as certain in its influence as that the sun rises in the East. It is one of those rare medical forces which act in the blood with the same degree of certainty that is found in all natural tendencies. The manner in which it dominates and controls the mysterious transference of rich, red, pure arterial blood for the diseased venous blood is marvelous.

Out through every skin pore acids, germs and other blood impurities are forced in the form of invisible vapor. The lungs breathe it out, the liver is stimulated to consume a great proportion of impurities, the stomach and intestines cease to convey into the blood stream the catarrhal, malarial germs; the bowels, kidneys, bladder and all emunctories of the body are marshaled into a fighting force to expel every vestige of eruptive disease.

Social Surveys and Rural Progress.

The present day movement for the enrichment of rural life has found one of its most practical aids in what is known as the social survey, that is to say a detailed and systematic inquiry into those facts and conditions which pertain to the human interests of a country district and which may be changed or utilized for the community's progress. We have seen the value of soil surveys to agriculture, of geological surveys to industry and more keenly, perhaps, than in any other age do we realize the importance of patient research and accurate information in every field of endeavor. We value statistics and scientific data of all kinds because they show us what needs to be done, what can be done and how to proceed.

It is doubtful that the average citizen in most counties, has any very definite idea concerning the conditions, good or bad, of his immediate environment. He scarcely is prepared to think clearly or to act efficiently with his neighbors in efforts for social betterment. As a result we have many well-intentioned theories but relatively few practical achievements. How different would this be, if citizens knew precisely wherein their community fell short of its opportunities and precisely where to begin and how to move in bettering it.

A social survey gathers complete and authentic information on schools, churches, highways, health, means of transportation, markets and on all conditions that concern the people's common life. Such a survey would show among other things the products of a particular county; it would show the growth or decline of agricultural interests, whether the trend of population was away from the farm and, if so, the reasons therefor; it would show what crops could be grown most profitably, what opportunities were being neglected, what tendencies should be encouraged and what should be checked.

The Ohio Board of Agriculture has recently done some very effective work in this direction as has also the University of Wisconsin; but no efforts of the kind are more interesting than those undertaken a few seasons ago by what is known as "the Georgia Club" of the State Normal School at Athens. This club, composed of members of the student body and the faculty with associate members in various parts of the State, applied itself to the study of economic and social conditions in particular counties and, to make the work as specific as possible, each student, or group of students, was assigned his home county for investigation. He would gather as many positive facts as he could, classify them and interpret them. Then all this information was published in a report and distributed among leading citizens of the county under review. An important feature of this research was that the students kept in close touch with the best informed people of their respective counties so that their findings were well balanced and carried a direct local appeal. It is a matter of record that these reports have frequently served to awaken a county to needs or opportunities which had long been neglected.

That is an admirable undertaking for any school. Its educational value to the students themselves is beyond reckoning and its public value is strikingly manifest. The social or rural survey is as essential in its sphere as is a soil survey to the farmer or a chemical analysis to the manufacturer. It furnishes the starting point and guidance to true progress.

Revised up to date—a short automobile is soon cranked.

A Question for the Legislature.

"If the people of Georgia pay $1.75 for school books for which the people of Canada pay only 79 cents, what do the Canadians pay for books that cost Georgians $1,000,000?

This interesting problem which was propounded several weeks ago by Representative McCrory in a communication to The Journal has aroused State-wide interest and brought scores of answers. While our arithmeticians differ slightly in their results, they agree that Georgians are paying considerably over half a million dollars more than Canadians pay for the same number and the same grade of school books. Hence arises another question far more interesting and vital than one of arithmetic: Why do the people of Georgia have to pay this more than half million dollar excess?

This is a matter that directly concerns every patron, every teacher and every pupil of our common schools. It is a matter which the incoming Legislature should investigate in all its bearings, especially in view of the fact that the State Board of Education will soon award text book contracts extending over a long period of years and involving millions of dollars.

Is this great sum of money being extorted from our people for the profit of special interests? The public is entitled to a clear-cut answer and evidently it is entitled to more reasonable prices on its school books. Let the Legislature turn on the light!

The Western and Atlantic Lease.

Since the present lease of the Western and Atlantic railroad, which is the property of the State of Georgia, expires in 1919, less than six years hence, it behooves the Legislature to enter upon a prompt and thorough consideration of the terms of a new lease that will be just and advantageous to all interests concerned. The questions to be dealt with are as manifold as they are important. In addition to the railway itself, there is a large and valuable area of terminal property both in Atlanta and Chattanooga that demands particularly careful attention. Indeed, this property can be disposed of in such a manner as to yield the State a revenue probably richer than that it now derives from the lease of the road's right of way and equipment.

Much has been said in this connection concerning the possibilities of the terminal yards at Chattanooga and it is clear that some plan should be devised whereby the Western and Atlantic property in that city may be turned to useful and profitable purposes instead of remaining, as it now is, a barrier to Chattanooga's development and of no remunerative value to this State.

It is equally important that similar plans be perfected for the terminal lands in Atlanta. By good management the State can lease much of this property for business purposes and at the same time have ample railway facilities. The fact is that a big tract of central real estate is now being sacrificed to smoke and cinders, whereas it could be converted into a source of steady and fruitful income for the State and a rich commercial asset for the City. It is evident that in this matter the interests of Atlanta and of the State are very closely interwoven. Hence, in considering this particular phase of the Western and Atlantic lease, the two should counsel and work together for their mutual good. In this connection, therefore, The Journal submits, for what they are worth, a few practical suggestions.

It should be noted, in the outset, that the railroad property east of Forsyth street can be utilized to far better advantage than now both in respect to the City and the State. This land, situated as it is in the heart of a great mercantile district, is much too valuable to be used as a switching yard when the State has contiguous property that would serve the same purpose equally as well. We suggest in the first place, therefore, that in making a new Western and Atlantic lease, the State exclude from railway uses that portion of its property which lies east of Forsyth street.

This could be done without impairing the value of the railway lease and without inconvenience to the railroads concerned. A new station has long been needed and must be had within the course of a few years. Then, let provision be made for a new station on the State's land west of Forsyth street, where it would be more accessible to the roads and to the public than in its present location.

This done, all the property east of Forsyth street would be free for business development and could be leased, in part to a private corporation or individuals, and in part to the City of Atlanta, the State thus acquiring a rich source of revenue in addition to that now received from the railroad alone. That such leases could be profitably negotiated, there is no doubt. Feasible plans have frequently been proposed for bridging over the cut between the Forsyth street viaduct and the present site of the Union station. Whether this space should be developed into a plaza and civic center, as was once suggested, or built up with business houses, it could unquestionably be turned to great practical account; and, if offered by the State for a long-term lease, say ninety-nine years, there would be no difficulty in organizing the capital required for its improvement.

The present site of the Union station is logically the place for a public market, of which Atlanta is in vital need. The City could well afford to lease this site from the State for a long period of years and establish thereon a modernly equipped municipal market. It is not necessary at this point to argue the advantages of such an institution; suffice it to say that the people demand a central market as one of the essentials of the city's growth and as a practical aid in reducing the high cost of living. By every natural circumstance, the site we have mentioned is the ideal spot for a market and, if used for that purpose, it would be profitable to the City and the State alike.

There are other seasonable enterprises that would fit admirably into this plan. The merchants and manufacturers of Atlanta, for instance, have been discussing for several years the value of establishing a permanent exhibit of the City's industrial products. A market building could be so constructed as to make ample provision for this project, and certainly no better place for a manufacturers' exhibit could be found.

Furthermore, there is manifest need of means whereby the State of Georgia can maintain a permanent exposition of its various products and resources. A few years ago the Legislature considered the advisability of erecting a special building for this purpose; and the proposition met with much favor. A commodious and attractive building on the present site of Union station would serve the needs of the State as well as those of the manufacturers and the City. Indeed, the combination of these three enterprises would enhance the interest and the value of each of them.

From the standpoint of the State, the important fact is that by leasing its terminal property apart from the railroad, it would enjoy a new source of large revenues, larger perhaps than that from the railway without reducing the rental value of the railroad a single dollar; and from the City's standpoint, it is clear that such a plan would relieve Atlanta of the sewer of smoke that now cuts it in twain and add marvelously to the community's progress and welfare.

These plans are worthy of the Legislature's thoughtful consideration; for, they will increase the value of the Western and Atlantic railroad and its collateral interests and will thereby benefit the people of Georgia, who are the owners of this magnificent property.

No dearth of news these days with a murder and graft investigation on, congress in session, and a half-dozen or so nations at war.

The Steady Growth of A National Idea.

It is a significant fact that within the past year or two forty-eight bills proposing federal aid for highway development have been introduced in Congress. Of these six have originated in the Senate and the remainder in the House. Among their authors every section of the Union has been represented. From the North, the East and the West as well as from the South have come insistent demands that the national government lend its support to the States in the great work of extending and maintaining good roads. What surer omen could there be that the American people as a whole have awakened to the importance of roadway improvement and are ready to apply their united energies and resources to the promotion of this enterprise?

It is an equally significant fact, however, that none of these bills has become a law. That may be explained largely on the ground that as yet Congress has been unable to agree on any definite, inclusive plan for committing the federal government to such an undertaking; and it is well that such a plan should be devised before any considerable fund for this purpose is appropriated. With that end in view there was appointed at the summer session of the sixty-second Congress a joint committee of the Senate and the House "to make inquiry into the subject of federal aid in the construction of post roads and report at the earliest practicable date." This committee has been studying all the legislation thus far proposed and also the road building systems of foreign countries. It has accumulated a vast amount of suggestive material from which no doubt some satisfactory plan to be applied in the United States will be evolved.

The gratifying circumstance is that we are at length getting down to practical details. The sentiment of the country is unmistakably in favor of national aid for highways; it remains only to perfect some method of procedure that will be consistent with national needs and that will guarantee a goodly return from whatever amount of money is appropriated. That accomplished, we may be reasonably sure that Congress will take definite and favorable action on this important matter.

All of the noteworthy plans thus far suggested propose State and national co-operation in road building. Of this character is the bill introduced last January by Senator Swanson, of Virginia, a member of the joint committee referred to. His measure would provide an appropriation of twenty-five million dollars "to be apportioned among the various States, one-half on the basis of population and one-half on the basis of rural delivery routes and star routes, the conditions being that each of the States should provide an amount equal to that it received, and providing further that no State should receive less than one hundred thousand dollars."

Still another interesting plan has been proposed by former Senator Jonathan Bourne, Jr., of Oregon. His suggestion contemplates the ultimate expenditure of three billion dollars by the federal government, this money to be raised through bonds and borrowed by the various States under an easy-payment system.

The important and cheering fact to be noted is that there is no longer any debate over the right or wisdom of the national government in aiding the States in the improvement of public roads; the question now is simply one of the most expedient course to pursue in rendering such aid. And that will undoubtedly be determined in the near future.

THE BIBLE ON THE STAGE

(Kansas City Star.)

At King's Hall, Covent Garden, in London, the other day a company of Norwich players presented a dramatized version of the Book of Job. A real morality play it was, full of all of the significance and charged with all the beauty and eloquence of the original story found in the Bible.

Which is a reminder that the Bible has been far from exhausted as a source of dramatic inspiration. There comes to mind the most recent example, "Joseph and His Brethren," played with so much success in New York through the winter season. In it figures the coat of many colors and Potiphar's wife.

Less widely known, because it has not yet been presented in this country, is the play, "Mary Magdalene," dramatized by Maeterlinck from the story found in the Bible. Many more plays there undoubtedly are, the action of which is drawn directly from stories of Bible lore. Of operas several are widely known. "Samson and Delilah" by Saint-Saens comes first to mind, founded as it is upon the biblical story of the undoing of the strong man and his enemies by his destruction of the temple. "Salome," by Richard Strauss, the dramatic vision having been suggested by the Bible account of the decapitation of John the Baptist at the caprice of the daughter of Herodias, is familiar. Less widely known are the opera "Herodiade" by Massenet, founded on Bible teaching, and "The Queen of Sheba" by Karl Goldmark. The action of the last opera is based upon the biblical account of the visit of the Queen of Sheba to King Solomon.

Outside the category of plays and operas founded upon concrete incidents of Bible history might be mentioned "Parsifal." It, of course, is the dramatization in the abstract of the search for the Holy Grail. Perhaps you can think of others.

Good Roads in Georgia

(Louisville Courier-Journal.)

The good roads problem is one of many phases and it is an acute issue in almost every state, regardless of the progress that has been made in road building.

The state of Georgia, for instance, has forged to the front rapidly in good roads mileage in recent years and now has 22,000 miles of improved highways. Georgia is not far behind Indiana, which leads all the states. When the convict lease system was abolished Georgia began to use her convicts on the public roads. Many counties have built roads under this arrangement, as the convicts are at the disposal of the counties, but Georgia has no state highway department and the roads are not built under state supervision.

The Atlanta Journal is advocating the establishment of a state highway commission. The Journal rightly says that with efficient state supervision more rapid progress would be made and more lasting results attained. It points out that in this way the best engineering skill would be obtainable at a nominal price; the convicts could be worked more economically; road material and machinery could be purchased more intelligently, and "all the counties could work co-operatively toward the development of a state system of roads."

The money that is being expended in Georgia—and it is a large amount—would be spent to better effect, no doubt, under state guidance. The counties should have the benefit of the counsel, advice and assistance of the state to the end that there might be some uniformity of methods and that every new section of improved road might be a link in a state system of highways and fit in harmoniously with the general scheme.

The situation in Georgia is just the reverse of that in Kentucky. Georgia is building roads, but has no highway department. Kentucky has a highway department, but virtually is building no roads. The Kentucky legislature has created the department, but has provided no other means of encouraging road construction. Thus two phases of the good roads problem are exemplified in two states.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

VI—RAILROAD SCALES.
BY FREDERIC J. HASKIN.

While the attention of the public has been drawn in countless ways to the possibilities of incorrect weights upon the scales of every grocery store, comparatively little has been said regarding the inaccuracies of the great railroad scales upon whose registers depend the rates of every sort of freight handled in the country. Freight shippers have made many complaints regarding this matter and the railroads themselves admit their justice. These complaints have drawn attention to the need of some supervision by the government over the large track scales which are used for weighing the freight cars themselves, as well as the smaller scales used by shippers doing an interstate business.

The railroads of the country collect at least $2,200,000,000 annually from the shippers. This enormous collection is based upon the registers of scales which belong to and are operated entirely by the railroads. Neither the shipper, the government nor any other agent has any authority over them or any definte information upon which to gauge their accuracy. In order to secure information which will enable the government to reach reliable conclusions as to what should be done to guarantee the accuracy of the railroad weights, as well as to aid the railroads to install correct scales, the government last year appropriated $25,000 to the bureau of standards for the purchase of a test weight car equipment.

It is expected this equipment will be ready for use in July and as soon as possible after that the inspection of some of the scales upon the eastern railroads will begin.

• • •

The ordinary railroad scales are so arranged that the wheels, brakes and other movable parts of the car are included in its standard weight. The inaccuracy of this is apparent since a wheel may need to be replaced and the new wheel may differ materially in weight from the former, or some other part of the car may need repairs in some way that would increase or lessen its weight. The new equipment provided by the bureau of standards includes a series of 10,000 pound weights and a truck for moving them on the scales is carried in a specially designed car provided with a power crane and other accessories for handling the weights. The advantage of this is that the weights may be standardized and transported from one end of the country to the other with reasonable assurance that they will remain constant. When the running gear is included in the weight of the test car it is subject to numerous variations which make it necessary to frequently verify this weight.

The railroad companies are recognizing the justice of the provision for protecting the public from inaccurate freight weights. Several weigh masters of railroads were in attendance at the conference of weights and measures and gave close attention to the diagrams demonstrating the working of the gigantic new equipment for testing railroad scales. Few companies have a thorough system for the maintenance of correct standards in weights or for making the changes and corrections required, so that until recently comparatively few railway track scales ever were tested and they were regarded as correct until they were decayed and unsafe for use.

One of the great railroads lately has adopted as its standard a four-section, fifty-two-foot track scale, having a capacity of 300,000 pounds and embodying the most modern ideas of scale construction. In this type all of the wooden substructures have been eliminated which used to decay and render the scale unstable and unsafe. No wood whatever is used in the scale proper excepting in the ties supporting the rail columns. These ties are placed on the platform to absorb the shock caused by the wheels of the car when they first strike the platform and also to protect the scale in case of derailment. With the old type of scale the overhanging portion of the platform has been eliminated, thus materially adding to the accuracy as well as the durability of the scale.

In order to insure accuracy, a railroad company may provide itself with a set of master weights from the bureau of standards which may be returned to Washington from time to time for verification. The last time these weights belonging to one railroad were returned for verification it was found that the fifty-pound master weight was out less than one part in 250,000, or less than a grain in fifty pounds. With the possibility of weighing with such close accuracy will come a recognition of the necessity of legislation to enforce it upon all railroads.

With the master weights as standards, the value of the other weights in use can easily be ascertained by comparison. A specially constructed balance has been designed for this purpose with the high sensibility varying less than two grains in 4,000 ounces. After the shop weights are made to conform with the master weights the fifty-pound test weights can be checked and resealed, as they will be used to try out the master scale upon which the test cars are to be proved. A master scale specially designed for this purpose, recently has been built for one large railroad. It is of all-steel construction with a capacity of 120,000 pounds. Under a load of 60,000 pounds, the weight of the heaviest test car, it shows a sensibility or variance of less than a pound.

After the test weight cars are proved upon the master scale they are placed in the care of a competent scale inspector and started out along the various routes covered by the railroad. Special instructions are issued that no work of any sort shall be done on the cars in transit unless the scale inspector is present, and that only such repairs can be made as may be actually required for safety. These precautions are necessary to insure the actual weight of the test cars at all times, and by this system the actual variance of the car at all times can soon be checked up and a compromise made if necessary. The test cars usually are sent upon routes requiring six or eight weeks to cover, and after each trip they are returned to the master scale and tested so that any inaccuracy which may have developed can be corrected. The possibilities of inaccuracies in freight weights under these conditions are exceedingly low. A test car under this system has been known to make as many as seven trips aggregating as much as 10,000 miles, without varying ten pounds in weight, notwithstanding that much of this travel was during the winter months.

It will be seen by these arrangements that as much care can be taken, and is already being taken by some railroads, to secure correct freight rates as is expected from the dealer in weighing out groceries to his customers. Under a system such as has been described the variance in railroad weights requires a much smaller per cent of allowance than that in use in the stores. The possibilities of enforcing such exactitude, however, will call for the highest degree of vigilance, as well as a scientific skill upon the part of the men making the tests. Many things tend toward inaccuracy. The pivots and bearings are most important, since friction between them may cause serious errors in weight. The selection of oil used in the lubrication of the scales may also affect the weight. Experiments are being made continually regarding the oils used upon railroad scales. Lard oil and petroleum have been found unsatisfactory as they spread over the pivots and have a tendency to loosen the sockets. The indiscriminate use of oil has been found disastrous. The oil best adapted to this purpose must possess great viscosity or gumminess, be non-hardening in the air or dampness and must be absolutely free from acid.

THE Traveling Man is sore on the town that's on the bum.

¶ He may be genial on the outside, but in his mind he has unspeakable feelings for the town that has backwoodsy arrangements and lack of comforts.

¶ His feelings are unspeakable only until he hits the trail again. Then he tells the other fellow and presently the word has passed all along the line.

¶ That town isn't long getting itself on the traveling man's blacklist.

¶ Is your town that kind?

¶ If you haven't got the nerve and the spunk and the foresight to fix things up, it's the greased plank for Yourville.

¶ Our specialty is the Physical Improvement of Towns. We put in Sanitary Systems of Sewerage, Light and Water Plants, Paving, and so on.

¶ We do the whole thing from start to finish,---plan, construct, finance, operate,---everything.

¶ We've done it for scores of towns that we'd like to tell you about. Write us, Do it today.

MRS. GRACE WANTED ON PENNSYLVANIA WARRANT

She and Charles H. Oldham Are Accused Together by Woman Sleuth

WESTCHESTER, Pa., June 7.—Mrs. Daisy Ulrich Opie Grace, who was acquitted several months ago at Atlanta, Ga., after being tried on an accusation that she shot her husband, is sought by officers upon a warrant issued by Justice of the Peace S. M. Paxton. Charles H. Oldham, manager of the Chester Valley Electric Light company, also is wanted on a similar warrant.

Both warrants charge statutory offenses and are based upon alleged actions of Mrs. Grace and Oldham at the Swan hotel at Downingtown, where they are said to have lived as "man and Mrs. Oldham" for several months, until last Tuesday, when the proprietor of the hotel is said to have requested them to vacate their apartments. The warrants calling for the arrest of the couple were made at the instance of Mrs. Ida Plummer, who followed Mrs. Grace to Downingtown and became very friendly with her. fter Mrs. Plummer had obtained all the information she desired, she told the hotel proprietor, it is said, that "Mrs. Oldham" and Daisy Ulrich Opie Grace were the same individual. Following her revelations, Mrs. Plummer came to Chester and was closeted for several hours with District Attorney Sproat and County Detective Jerreys. This conference ended in the issuance of the warrants for the arrest of the couple.

Mrs. Plummer told the district attorney that she represented the Mothers' congress, and that she was interested in the case as she sought to prevent Mrs. Grace getting a divorce from the husband, who is a helpless cripple as a result of the revolver shot which Mrs. Grace was accused of firing.

She gave as her reason that if Mrs. Grace obtains the divorce she seeks, she will gain possession of her aged, crippled blind boyby her first husband, who is an inmate in an Overbrook institution.

Other persons declare that Mrs. Plummer is a detective in the employ of Grace, who is seeking a divorce in the Georgia courts.

ARGENTINE PACKERS THREATEN TO CLOSE

(By Associated Press.)

BUENOS AYRES, Argentina, June 7.—Six of the leading packing houses of Argentine chilled beef companies presented to the Argentine government today a note declaring that if the present unfavorable situation continued they would close their plants because other companies established in the country were preparing to establish an absolute monopoly of the meat trade by selling in the English markets Argentine meats at less than cost. The companies in the note declare that in presenting the note they were incited by a desire to warn the Argentine government of the consequences.

CAROLINA U. C. T.'S COME OUT FOR MILEAGE PULL

SALISBURY, N. C., June 7.—The United Commercial Travelers of North and South Carolina closed their two days' session here this afternoon, after selecting Greenville, S. C., as the meeting place for next year. The convention went on record as indorsing the movement for an adjustment of the freight rate question in this state, and also passed a resolution demanding that the railroads be compelled to pull mileage on trains in North Carolina and asking that the legislature enact a law that will accomplish the end desired without creating a situation such as at present exists in South Carolina.

MITCHELL BARRED AS LABOR COMMISSIONER

(By Associated Press.)

ALBANY, N. Y., June 7.—Supreme Court Justice Chester today upheld the contention of Attorney General Carmody that Governor Sulzer was without legal authority in appointing John Mitchell, former president of the United Mine Workers' of America, as state labor commissioner. The question now goes to the higher courts.

The effect of Justice Chester's decision is also to uphold the conclusion of attorney general that the governor may not appoint several other state officers without the consent of the legislature.

Three Open Letters Given Out Saturday By T. B. Felder

friend, by giving publicity to villainous charges embodied in an affidavit I had reason to believe false. I have never in my career winked at or sanctioned fraud, and I never will. If I had been disposed, Dick, to indulge your character and reputation by the use of this villainous Caliban, A. S. Colyar, Jr., I could have done so about 2 1-2 years ago, when he offered in this market a batch of forged affidavits which he claimed you employed him to secure, and for which he claimed further you declined to pay him in full. These affidavits contained damnable charges against a distinguished citizen of this city, who was and is known to be an enemy of yours. He tendered along with these affidavits his personal affidavit, which he made the specific charge that you employed him to secure these affidavits, even though resort to forgery be necessary in their procurement. I may claim some credit for the fact that these affidavits were not given to the public at that time through the columns of your contemporaries; of course you were my friend, Dick, and I was on guard, as I usually am, to protect my friends, even either their lives, liberty or property are put in peril.

SAYS COLYAR GOT $500

Now, as to the Felder and Woodward dictograph episode—Colyar is offering for sale affidavits which contain the following specific charges against you: First, That you paid him $500.00 for this alleged dictograph report; That upon a close inspection of the report you reached the conclusion that it was faked, that under your direction some one or more of your employees proceeded to edit out certain portions, thereby declaring evidences of forgery; that when portions thereof could not be revised so as to make it appear genuine, they were entirely bodily from the manuscript and the following inserted in lieu thereof; "Confusion, cars passing, machinery running, conversation lost, disturbance," and the like; that after my card appeared calling attention to the evidence of fraud, you then and there summoned him, Colyar, to a hurried conference, when and where it was decided that young Gentry must be hurried from the scene of action; that the custody of the original note book must be obtained and the same destroyed, and that you actually paid him $166 to defray the expenses of young Gentry's flight.

A few days ago Colyar was arrested on a charge of forgery, alleged to have been committed in Knoxville, Tenn., and placed in jail. Since his liberation, he is authority for the statement that I employed and paid counsel for him, with the distinct understanding that as soon as liberated he should flee the country, intimating that it was upon this distinct understanding that you extended to him succor and aid; but that he is determined to stand by his guns and at the opportune time will cheerfully furnish all necessary evidence of this miserable "frameup," including your personal connection therewith.

DOESN'T BELIEVE CHARGES.

I repeat I do not believe his charges against you to be true any more than you believe his charges against me to be so, forgery from our little association, covering as I have above stated, the period of a quarter of a century, I do not think that you will be easily misled in believing that the other could be guilty of criminal conduct.

Your attitude and Americanism my understanding is that the supreme test of friendship is the willingness and readiness of a friend to render succor and aid in the hour of adversity. When you were put in bankruptcy, I told you I had in cash $12,000 or $15,000, all of which was at your service; that I would raise as much more by pledging my property, and this I would cheerfully do, and you, Dick, which of us has acted a friend's part, you or I?

SAYS COLYAR IS CRAFTY.

This villain Colyar is unusually crafty enough to bolster up his perjuries and forgeries by plausible circumstantial corroborating of the most illustrative on Monday night, after my card was published on Sunday, he called up the widowed mother of young Gentry over the telephone and asked her to get possession of the note book and have it delivered to him at once. To quote him literally, "I will not take it if it is, for we don't get possession of this note book, for this fellow, Felder, will jail the whole bunch."

Dick, a delicious episode occurred during my negotiations with Colyar for the alleged purchase of the documents showing that the city detectives were destroying evidence in the Phagan case. Its pertinency will become apparent as it is unfolded. I know you will enjoy it as I did, even though it be at your expense. While Colyar was negotiating with you for the sale of his "dictograph manuscript" he called at my office one day and said to me that within an hour he would meet the custodian of the note book, that he would call me over the phone, placing the custodian at an extension phone; he would ask me if I were "ready to come across with that $1,000 if he were ready to deliver the goods." I was to reply, "Yes." He now tells me, Dick, that this was a frame-up on you to get that $500, and the way you "fell for it was a caution;" that he put you at one extension phone and my good old friend, Jack Cohen, at another, and that after the conversation you three boys held a love feast, and, literally did a sore and dance to that melodious, soulful old tune, "Comrades, Comrades, Ever Since We Were Boys," and that from that moment forward you were as gullible as the yellow-mouth baby mocking bird. His description of his experience with you and Jack afterwards I know would excite your risibles. He says from that moment to the time of his unfortunate arrest you were engaged on the charge of forgery and "a dilemma from which you furnished the money to extricate him" that you would "fall for almost anything." In his dramatic description of your attitude, he likens you and Jack to the little yellow mouth, fledged baby birds in the nest, and himself to the old mother bird; that he flew away, "grabbed" the "worm" of my conversation; flew back to the nest; up went your credulous little yellow mouths, and down went the worm, entrails, hair and all; that after that, every time his "fledgelings" heard the flappings of the wings of the mother bird, whether she brought to the nest worm or twig, up would go the yellow mouths of her darling "fledgelings" and down would go either worm or twig. Dick, I really want you and Jack to get him on one of his numerous visits to your office to rehearse this for you, for I know the boys will enjoy it, as I know you well enough to know that you enjoy a "good one," even though the joke is at your expense.

IS UTTERLY INDIFFERENT.

Dick, in a vein of seriousness, I am utterly indifferent to sensational and damaging publications reflecting upon my integrity of character, for I rest serene in the conscious security which honor and rectitude always afford to one whose heart is in the right place, and I am content to bide my time in patience for the fulfillment of that sweetest of all maxims, "Truth is omnipotent, and will prevail." But Dick, baseless libels against the professional character and integrity of a citizen, whether done to get a "scoop" on some competitor, or through malice or malevolence, is not only an extension of the doctrine of the "Liberty of the Press," but an invasion of the rights of the citizen; and take my word for it, an outrage of this character will some day be perpetrated upon some long suffering citizen, who, goaded to desperation by these attacks, will take the law in his own hands to protect his reputation and career in the state, with reckless and too frequent onslaughts upon the character of the private citizen by the riotous license of the press have their tragic angle, involving as they do not only the personal humiliation and embarrassment of the individual slandered, but the happiness and peace of his family.

The premises considered, I think it due me that you withdraw and repudiate the groundless charges made against me.

I am,

Very truly yours,

THOS. B. FELDER

LETTER TO CHIEF LANFORD.

Atlanta, Ga., June 7, 1913.

Newport Lanford.

With apologies to the reading public for parading before them a "barrow of butcher's offal" so harmoniously blended in your personality, I shall now proceed to redeem the pledge heretofore made to lay bear, through the columns of the papers your infamous career in the mal-administration of the affairs of the official position which you disgrace and dishonor. When I have finished, I promise, that as to you, the incident, so far as newspaper publication is concerned, shall be forever closed.

In dealing with the situation in my several cards, I am acting strictly within the admonition of the late lamented Rev. Sam P. Jones: "When you shave a gentleman, use a razor; when you shave a hog, use a brick." It must strike even one of your mental calibre that in treating you personally as the latter instrument recommended by the illustrious divine must be employed. It is not within the province of this card to deal with the vice conditions which flourish in this city under your fostering care and protection. This matter is under investigation by the grand jury of this county, and I am quite certain it will be thorough and exhaustive so, I entertain no doubt that this phase of the situation, which will be embodied in their findings, will show, abundantly, your criminal connection therewith in all of its hideous deformity.

"BOARD MEMBER PROTECTED."

I can not, however, leave this branch of the subject without making some comment upon the action of the police board in "resoluting" confidence in their distinguished (?) soon to be extinguished, chief of the vice department of this city by decorating his manly bosom with a bouquet. "Oh, mother, mother, mother, won't you pin a rose on me?" I know nothing as to the personal or official conduct of any of the gentlemen composing this honorable body, nor have I lodged any charge against them before the grand jury, or elsewhere, but if the courtesy which is said to have been extended to one of their board who "resoluted," namely, protecting him from arrest and imprisonment in jail on the eve of beating his paramour, has been extended to any considerable number of the others, even your obtuse mind can discern the reason why your co-conspirators who had more intelligence if not less character than you, admonished you that this was a dangerous expedient and would be inevitably shown up later, so this part of your infamous scheme was abandoned. You say you had no connection with Gentry; you were not present when those notes were written out, Oh, what a sweet scented liar! You stood over him while this bungling forgery was being perpetrated, and aided in it by telling him what to write. In this wicked transaction you were literally the last at the cross and the first at the sepulchre.

I desire to direct public attention to your activities along another line. Your "brother in the criminal bond," Cole L. Blease, of South Carolina, sued out a warrant in his home county, charging me with an attempted bribery. This seems to be a favorite charge among you criminals. The warrant was issued in 1911; the crime alleged to have been committed was in 1905. In the interim, I spent the greater part of three and a half years in the state of South Carolina, recovering for that graft-ridden state many hundreds of thousands of dollars, out of which the state had been defrauded by Blease and his associates. When this warrant was sued out, your criminal friend Blease sent one of his hirelings to a man in the state of Georgia, who had some dealings with the state of South Carolina and urged him to clandestinely visit out governor, with whom he was supposed to have influence, and urge him to honor the requisition, stating that it was important to get me into the state of South Carolina and have me put out of the way; that he had already arranged this part of the program. Later this hireling of South Carolina criminal associate presented to the grand jury of his home county all of his forged evidence, and, by the way, forged evidence seems to be the fort of you criminals, whose crimes I have exposed, and the grand jury, by a decisive vote, returned a no-bill.

Now to the point. You have, during the interim between the refusal of the requisition and up to this good hour, been in constant communication with the agents of this vagabond governor (since this controversy you have been somewhat more active) and, notwithstanding you are a peace officer in Georgia, sworn to preserve the peace, you have entered into a conspiracy with the agents of your criminal associate in South Carolina to kidnap me some night, between the drink and my home, put me in an automobile, and send me into the state of South Carolina.

There are several other matters that I wish later to bring to the attention of the people of this community for their consideration, but my purpose is to do it through the medium of the grand jury. I found it a difficult task to uncover the South Carolina criminals, but finally succeeded in doing so, because they were intelligent criminals; I am finding it quite easy to uncover you for the reason that for the lack of intelligence you a common, ordinary, filthy criminal.

I hope to be able, at an early meeting of the grand jury of this county, to lay before them the facts in hand for the indictments handed out against you and your fellows in crime.

T. B. FELDER.

LETTER TO CHIEF BEAVERS.

Atlanta, Ga., June 7, 1913.

Mr. J. L. Beavers,

Chief of Police, Atlanta, Ga.

Sir:

Two days after the publication of the alleged dictograph record I called upon Marion Jackson, chairman of the executive committee of the Men and Religion Forward Movement. I called upon him for two reasons; namely, first, I believed him to be my friend, and second, I knew him to be yours. In my conference with him I think I convinced him that in the authentic records could be found the only means by me of official corruption against you. In the conference I offered to submit all matters of issue to the arbitrament of the executive committee of the Men and Religion Forward Movement. He gave it as his opinion that this was not the proper tribunal to settle the controversy. The only charges imputed to me as having been made against you were charges contained in the dictograph record. If you do not now know that this record is a forgery, you stand alone in your ignorance on the subject among the citizens of Atlanta. Why, to the end that "this stunt was pulled off" you have always had my best wishes in connection with the discharge of your official duties. I had always considered you sincere, not overly bright and not especially timid for the office you hold, still not being a citizen of Atlanta—I live in the county—your fitness or want of fitness was not a matter of particular concern to me; that you were a payer of the city and intensely interested in its progress and prosperity. I felt that you should be given a fair chance to make good for the position you occupied.

"NOT FITTED FOR OFFICE."

I am now convinced that you are not intellectually and temperamentally fitted for the office you occupy, and I shall proceed to give you the reasons for the conclusion I have reached:

When this dictograph "stuff" was published, instead of inquiring as to its genuineness, as any city official capable of discharging the duties of his office should and would have done, you permitted yourself to rush into public print, hurling abusive epithets and libelous matter viciously at me. You should have known that this conduct might have resulted in a breach of the peace, which you, as an officer, are sworn to conserve, and if the charges made against me were untrue, you violated a penal statute of the state.

You charged me with being the paid attorney at once of gamblers and, with co-operating with them as paid counsel to reinstate former conditions in this city, and I am not to be induced to lodge a charge of this character against a citizen, however humble, without some evidence to support it, and do not now, in the past, and do not expect in the future to represent individuals, firms or associations of individuals, engaged directly or indirectly in the business of running a house to foster or promote vice and crime in the city of Atlanta. I have lived in Atlanta twenty-three and one-half years, and during this period I have never represented the keeper of a brothel in any court in the county of Fulton. I usually decline such employment. During the period I have appeared in four cases of violation of the prohibition laws, and in three at least I was employed by outside breweries to test the constitutionality of laws and ordinances.

I think it very undignified for you to have branded me as a professional crook and to have declared that "it takes one crook to catch another." In thus characterizing me you are guilty of libel, and you know it, and in making this and similar libelous charges, you but strengthened the opinion of many, that you are not intellectually and temperamentally fitted for the office of chief of police. Moreover, your maxim is faulty, that "it takes a crook to catch a crook." Your chief of detectives is a living refutation of this doctrine.

WHO CHARGED CORRUPTION.

In a conversation recently had with you, I promised to tell you who charged you with official corruption. I now beg to comply with this promise—Colyar and Feburary, sitting in my law office about two weeks ago, imparted this information. It was they, and not I, who said that you and Lanford had a graft list, it was they, and not I, who said that you met a woman at 119 Garnett street twice a week, as I now remember, Tuesdays and Thursdays, and that this fact was pretty generally known. I expressed my doubt as to the truth of both of these statements, whereupon Colyar stated that he would notify any citizen interested on one of your visits to this number, and that if the mayor would appoint special officers to arrest you he would have you caught and ridden nude through the streets of the city, to quote him literally, "so that the people would know what a damned hypocrite" you are. This conversation, in these words, in my office furnished the foundation for the dictograph "stuff" in which I am made the author of this remark. It was they who told me that certain detectives and police visited Fombys and got on drunken brawls there almost nightly. It was they also who told me of the existence of dens of vice in the city; it was they also who told me that from some you received protection, others received protection from you because conducted by relatives of yours; and still others because frequented or owned by your political friends. If you extend protection, which I have not and do not charge, to any of these, I do not believe it is a living refutation of this doctrine.

FURNISHED NO LIST.

Permit me to say that while before the grand jury I frankly stated my inability to testify to vice conditions said to exist in Atlanta, for my evidence would be hearsay. I furnished that body no list or roster of disreputable places, but am informed that a list was furnished by others.

In conclusion, permit me to say that my understanding is that you now have in connection the police department of the city of Atlanta plenary power to appoint, remove and discipline your subordinates. If you are really a capable official, it is your duty to investigate the recent dictograph episode directed by the so-called chief of the detective department, and if you find him to be guilty of being responsible for the miserable frame-up, it seems to me to be your duty to promptly remove him from office.

I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,

T. B. FELDER.

"Liar and Grafter," Say Colyar and Lanford, In Answer To Felder

and strayed far away from the teachings and training of a Christian mother and refined home, and when I first met you I was trying to lead an honorable life, although I was young, and had you had the benefit of the instinct of the gentleman in you that James R. Gray has you would have tried to help me along the pathway to an honorable way and not used me to go to South Carolina to help you and your co-conspirators frame up against Governor Bleasc.

HAS THE RECORDS.

I have records in my possession that will show that a certain stool pigeon of yours furnished the money that you sent to me in South Carolina, because you did not have the moral courage to do it yourself. Even though you have stated in one of your first articles that knowing my character that you refused to hire me to go to South Carolina for you—to refresh your memory didn't you send one of your detectives to Charlestown, S. C., with a letterof introduction to me, signed by you, written on the letter head of your then law firm, "Anderson, Felder, Rosser & Hoge," and further, didn't you meet me in Columbia, S. C., on the 5th day of July, 1911, I drew a draft on your friend Eli Lilly, which was endorsed by Rev. B. Lacy Hoge, pastor of the First Baptist church of Charleston, S. C., and after you were through with me, you refused to protested the draft and sent it back with the statement that I had no authority to draw the same, although I had drawn authority, several hundred dollars' worth of similar drafts, which Dr. Hoge had cashed, and is it not a matter of fact that several weeks later that Rev. Dr. Hoge visited Atlanta from South Carolina and threatened to expose you and your friend if you didn't pay this draft and didn't you have it paid?

In your first statement of May 23d, the day that the Atlanta Journal published the famous dictographetory, you began to whine like a miserable cur, "I don't believe, they had any dictograph, for the company does not rent their machines to blackmailers, and crooks to be used against gentlemen." Please tell the people of this city how you succeeded in getting one to dictograph Governor Bleasc with?

In your letter to Mr. Gray you layed great stress upon the fact that he published the dictograph story, which was "the uncorroborated vaporings of the diseased mind of Felder, a bunch of political and moral pervert, especially when the mass of putrid matter furnished you by him bore all the earmarks of a well laid and deliberate forgery. And in view of the further fact that at least one other paper to which it was tendered, rejected it. This is another one of your frame-ups and wilful and deliberate and false statements, for the article in question was tendered no paper except the one that published it.

I defy you to publish any contract, if you ever had one, with the Colemans, or any of their neighbors, to prosecute the Phagan case, and I make the assertion here that if you ever had any real desire to prosecute the murderers of this innocent child, your desire was choked with the dollar mark in the interest of you and your friend "Affidavit Tobler."

A WILFUL LIE.

You charge that Newport Lanford and I have been friends for three years, and intimate that we have been of the blackmailing business against the citizens of Atlanta during that time. Mr. Lanford is fully capable of defending himself in making care of himself in any controversy that he may have with you, but this is merely another wilful statement on a wilful, malicious, infamous lie.

You further charge that Mr. Febuary and myself were the ones that told you that Chief Beavers was corrupt and was visiting a woman on Garnett street and that if the mayor would give us some special officers we would have him arrested. I denounce this statement as a wilful, deliberate and infamous lie, and that you knew you were lying at the time you made it. I am sorry that my poverty forbids me from hiring a public hall in this city, where I would take great pleasure in meeting you face to face before the good people of this city and exposing you from the right man as you should be exposed. I could tell some things that I wouldn't even ask a respectable Journal to publish and you know what they are. I am surprised that a man of your alleged intelligence would make an attack that you have made upon a man with the diseased brain you say I have. You laid great stress in your letter this afternoon on the fact that I was arrested for Beavers and Chief Beavers, on a telegram from Knoxville. Now why don't you go on and state that after Beavers held you in bond for six days that you and one of your henchmen that you have publicly claimed that you owned, framed up a second arrest in the court house, to intimidate me from going before the Fulton county grand jury, and wasn't it done because you believed that the sheriff of this county in order to cater to your malice and spleen, would send me to jail without bond, and didn't you get mad because you got sadly left?

In your letter to Mr. Gray this afternoon you charge that he paid me $500 for an alleged dictograph report, and that after inspecting the same he reached the conclusion that it was faked and that under his direction some one or more of his employes proceeded to edit out of the manuscript the most glaring evidence of forgery, and then published the same.

No one who has sense enough to stay out of the lunatic asylum, will believe your assertion. It is false from beginning to end.

"A SCANDAL MONGER."

You charge further, that when your dear friend of twenty-five years standing discovered the evidence of this record being faked, that he summoned me to a hurried conference, and that it was decided that Mr. Gentry must be hurried from the scene of action, and that his note book must be obtained and the same destroyed, and you charge him with actually paying young Gentry $100 to become a criminal and a fugitive from justice.

This assertion is too absurd and ridiculous to emanate from any brain except that of the scandal monger that you are.

"Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad,"

and it would seem that the gods are determined to destroy you, and you have no one to blame but yourself. You have been given every chance to explain and to be allowed to prove the dictograph charges before five honorable citizens that you preferred to go to your friend, Hugh M. Dorsey, whom you have publicly proclaimed that you own, and tried to muddy the stream so that no investigation of your conduct could be successfully carried out. Were I the miserable villain and unfortunate outcast that you have described me and you and your friends have painted me in this city, guilty of the crimes that you have attributed to me the last thirty days, not only in the dictograph record, but where you have attempted to say, under oath, as such as I have been informed, that I showed you an affidavit from one James Conley claiming that he had murdered this poor girl. I would further, characterized as a lawyer and put in the chaingang; and if I had attempted to put my hand in my big pocket as you did in the court house last Thursday. I wouldn't have been allowed to go to the lavatory before I was searched. You know why you were not. You say that I called Gentry's mother up on Monday night after your card was published on Sunday and that I got her to sign a confession of the note book. I was informed that the lady was sick in bed, and I am surprised that she would have anything to do with you after you have charged that her son helped frame up a forged and perjured dictograph record on you, and that she don't know you. You charge further in your letter that I went to your office after I was negotiating with Mr. Gray for the sale of the dictograph manuscript, and stated to you that I would call you over the phone and ask you if you would give me two thousand dollars if I would deliver the goods, and you were to reply yes, and that I told you that this was a frame up to get $500 out of Mr. Gray, and that he fell like a sucker. You further charge that Mr. Gray and Major Jack Cohen were on the line at the time listening to my conversation with you.

For the benefit of the public, I wish to state that I had not seen Mr. Gray in two years until the day before The Atlanta Journal published the story that T. B. Felder had been dictographed and caught in the act of trying to steal the papers in the Phagan case, and that there was no understanding with Mr. James R. Gray, Major Cohen, or any one connected with or representing The Atlanta Journal, to pay me any sum for this story, if I had expected or wanted any money for this story I think I am too good a student of human nature to insult Mr. James R. Gray by offering to sell him a framed up and forged dictograph record. I note in your letter that you try to be serious and state that you are surprised and cared nothing of the vile and damaging publications reflecting upon your integrity of character.

SUCH AUDACITY!

"Ye Gods!" Have you got the audacity to claim that you have any character in this community after being caught in the act of trying to bribe a poor young boy, who was struggling to make an honest livelihood, to commit the crime, and then send him to jail in order that you might feast and fatten on the money that you could filch out of the citizens of Atlanta, and the blood of that poor murdered girl lies in a Cobb county tomb crying for vengeance, and you were posing here as an employed prosecuting attorney, when a majority of the people of this city believed that you were working in the interest of the man accused of the crime? Do you remember a conversation that you had with Mr. Febuary and me in your office on May 19, 1913, in which you laid great stress upon the fact that Chief Lanford had violated his oath of office by holding without term of law, Jim Conley, a black innocent negro? Did you not know at that time what Conley knew? And why were you so anxious to prosecute Lanford and cared nothing for the other two negroes who were held without warrant of law? Why has the public heard no more of your "patriotic intentions to prosecute Leo M. Frank since The Atlanta Journal published the dictograph story and the public got wise and the money stopped coming into your coffers? Now, my coconspirator in crime, if you really and truly wanted to prosecute the murderer of Mary Phagan why didn't you volunteer to do it like any honorable attorney would, and not have one of your pikers try to palm you off on J. W. Coleman, as he swore that you did?

My dear dictograph friend, I love a fight that is an honorable one, but I hate to fight a poor weak miserable thing like you that will hide behind governors, mayors, and solicitors general that you claim to have bought, and believes half of your gas about owning governors, but it does look strange that the solicitor general would not allow a full searchlight to be turned upon your acts in this community since the dictograph exposure came out. If I were you before I paraded to the world about graft and corruption in others, I would stop and think how many people you had grafted in state legislatures and federal prisons, and your poor dying friend, Chas. W. Morse, recently elected president of a steamship line. You talk about justice. Poor Justice! It is asleep. If you had justice you would now be a guest of Warden Tom Lanford in the city stockade. I know that it is sad to think that you and your friend of twenty-five years, standing will not be able to celebrate that silver anniversary.

"Alas they have been friends in youth
But whispering tongues can poison truth
And constancy only lives in realms above
And life is thorny and youth is vain
And to be wroth with one we love
Doth work like madness in the brain."

WILL WRITE HIM A LETTER

Now in conclusion permit me to say a few things to you, as this will probably be the last letter that I will ever have the pleasure of writing you, with one exception. I am going to visit my native land, my beloved Tennessee, within whose sacred soil sleeps all that is mortal of a sweet sainted mother, a noble father and brothers and sisters. While in this land of my nativity that such heroes as John Sevier, Andrew Jackson, James K. Polk, Andrew Johnson and last but not least, the great "Apostle of Sunshine," Robert Love Taylor, made immortal, I intend to visit Knoxville, the city that you claim I am a fugitive of justice from and I shall write you a letter from that city, but I will not write it from the Knox county jail," and I would indeed take great pleasure in receiving a reply from you dated "Columbia, S. C." though it would give me pain to know that my former co-conspirator in crime against Governor Cole L. Blease was languishing in a South Carolina jail, as I know you would be if you were in the Palmetto State. You only escaped going there through the mercy of an all wise Providence and the misplaced charity of His Excellency Jos. M. Brown, governor of Georgia.

FELDER AS A LAWYER.

You talk about your great and unblemished character as a lawyer at the Atlanta bar, when, if the truth were known, when God Almighty reads you, Tommy, He hadn't dreamed of a lawyer in six months; He was thinking of a pen in a pod, counting away in the unborn of some legislative hall, seeking some poor hillbilly senator that you might flatter or bribe into voting on some pet scheme of some corporation that has heretofore hired you as one of their lobbyists to hang around legislative halls. I am indeed sorry that I, the poor moral pervert and degenerate, irresponsible creature that you claim me to be, have to write you these letters, for what you imagine that every one must bow at your sweet will and that no one must attack your motives or answer any of your villainous inclinations. Poor moral degenerate that I am, I wish to say to you that my forefathers shed blood at King's mountain and some of them died upon the fields of Shiloh, and I would be unworthy of the blood that courses through my veins if I would let you, the miserable bribe giver, lobbyist and grafter that you are known to be, drive me out of the state of Georgia, that has been made famous by such sons as Alexander Stephens, John B. Gordon, Robert Toombs and Benjamin H. Hill. No doubt you have discovered by now that even with your two frame-ups to land me in jail I am still at Williams House No. 2, city of Atlanta, made famous by the dictograph, which you stated at the Transportation club, after you had escaped the clutches of Felder, would not lie. When it caught you in the act of trying to steal the papers in the Mary Phagan murder case, you declared unanswered terms your dictograph friend which had been so faithful to you in days gone by. As I told you, you were in Fulton county, you were a framer from Framerville, but your frames are too shallow to stand the storms that follow, as you evidently have found out.

Farewell, Dictograph Tommy. If we never meet again on life's scene of action, and I should be so unfortunate as not to reach the city of heavenly rest, please be charitable enough in Hades not to tell this satanic majesty that I was one of your co-conspirators in South Carolina, for, if you do, he will make life in the lower regions very uncomfortable for me.

A. S. COLYAR.

Atlanta, Ga., June 7, 1913.

"Unprincipled Prevaricator," Says Chief Lanford

When acquainted with the contents of Felder's open letter of attack upon him Detective Chief N. A. Lanford gave out the following statement:

"I regret exceedingly the necessity which compels me into a controversy with an irresponsible, unprincipled prevaricator like Felder. He is a stranger to truth and his chief claim to notoriety is based upon the reckless slanders he has heretofore periodically vomits forth upon his betters.

"His entire attack on me is woven with a warp of lies and a woof of hypocrisy. It is fortunate for me and others objects of his venom that he has by his questionable performances of the past made himself sufficiently well known to the general public for it to know with what credence to receive his vicious but silly onslaughts.

"At frequent intervals for many years I have read of Felder's controversies. In each of them he has always assumed a bombastic attitude and has rushed into print with all the abandon of a fool hurling unsupported charges here and slinging lies yonder. And to save my life I can not recall that he ever made good in a single one of his many wrangles.

"Felder says that I have known Colyar for three years and that I have been conniving with him for that period. This is a lie. The first time I ever saw or heard of Colyar was about a week or ten days after the Phagan murder and I have never met him more than a dozen times since. When he says that I have been conspiring with Colyar to frame up on citizens of this community he tells a black and contemptible lie—a lie uttered by a craven coward of the blackest type. There is not a spark of manhood left in him or he would not give utterance to such unfounded statements.

"HE LIES AGAIN."

"He says I promised Surles that I would not use his name. Here again he lies. All I said to Surles, while negotiating with him to install the dictograph, was that I intended to use it in the interest of justice.

"He says I misled and duped young Gentry, the stenographer who took down the dictograph conversations. Again he lies. I have never seen Gentry but once in my life and that was in my office on the morning of the day Felder walked into the dictograph trap.

"I was seeking to obtain the services of an absolutely reliable stenographer and had my secretary call up Edward Crusselle, an expert court stenographer. Mr. Crusselle stated that he was just about to leave the city and furnished my secretary with the names of one or two other stenographers. They were called up but were out. Then my secretary suggested Gentry, whom, he said, was a clean, reliable young man and a rapid shorthand writer.

"I had Gentry called up and requested him to come to my office. In acquainting him with the work which I desired him to do I sought to impress upon him that all I wanted was a true and correct record of what came to him over the wires of the dictograph. I told him that I would expect him to swear to the accuracy of the record he made and inquired his age. He told me that he had passed his twenty-first birthday about a week before.

"Felder says I had Colyar call up Gentry's home and say that unless the young man furnished me his note book I would be in a hell of a fix. This, too, is a lie. I never had Colyar call up Gentry or anybody else.

"He says I sent Geutry out of town and furnished him the money to go on. I bought for Gentry on Saturday morning after the dictograph incident Gentry talked to me over the telephone. He said that he had been advised that there was a warrant out for him charging him with conspiracy. I told him that was all bosh and suggested to him that if he was annoyed by any one to let me know and I would attend to them. He thanked me and that was the last I've heard of him.

HASN'T PAID HIM YET.

"I not only did not furnish Gentry with money to leave town, but the young man has never yet called upon me for pay for his services, which I contracted for in good faith and for which I expect to pay.

"Felder lies when he says I stood over Gentry and compelled him to doctor the dictograph records. As I said before, I never saw Gentry but once, and that was for but a few minutes in my office before the dictograph was even installed. When the dictograph records were brought to me they had been typewritten and duly sworn to by Gentry.

"Felder lies when he says that I have stated that I know Gentry's whereabouts. At the request of his relatives I did make efforts to locate him. Later these relatives got into communication with him and notified my secretary that he would be on hand when he was wanted.

"I sincerely hope he does return to the city. I will welcome a statement from him giving all the facts about the dictograph matter.

"Felder says that I conspired with Colyar to frame up affidavits to the effect that he (Felder) had run Gentry out of town to keep him away from the grand jury. This is another of his multitude of lies. He is so accustomed to lying that he just cannot tell the truth. I have never heard of any such affidavit.

"The most amusing of all Felder's lies is that I am in a conspiracy with Governor Blease of South Carolina to get him into that state and that I plan to kidnap him, put him into an automobile and rush him over the border.

"Now, of all the absurd propositions that is the limit. Felder evidently suffers many and varied hallucinations. I cannot conceive how it is possible for a man of sound mentality to conjure up such a ridiculous idea. And to think he actually offers it to the public as a fact.

"I have known for a long time that whenever Felder heard the name of Blease mentioned cold chills chased up and down his quivering spine and he invariably looked about him for assassins, kidnappers and spooks.

SEND HIM TO CREMATORY.

"I don't know of an automobile sorry enough to use in transporting Felder, but it would be a God-send to the community if one of the garbage carts would get him and carry him to the crematory. I would dislike very much indeed to impose such a carcass on the good old state of South Carolina.

"I have never had any direct or indirect communication with Governor Blease, and the only time that I remember mentioning him was when I suggested that I would take A. S. Colyar to Knoxville, Tenn., without extradition papers if he (Felder) would waive legal formalities and go with one of my men to Columbia where Governor Blease could press his charges against him.

"Having disposed of Felder's lies I wish to ask him the following questions:

Where is the money you grafted from the public through the plea that you wished to bring detectives here to find evidence to convict the muderer of Mary Phagan?

"Failing to get the Colemans to employ you why did you go to New York, and then come back here with the statement that you were employed by friends of the slain girl to assist the prosecution?

"If you were acting in good faith why did you not also retain us for holding Newt Lee, the negro night watchman, and Gordon Bailey, the negro elevator boy, who have both been held just as long as Conley?

"YOU BUTTED IN."

"I have been forced to doubt your good faith in this case, since you ran into it. You butted in. You are sure because I exposed you by allowing the publication of the Coleman affidavit, showing that the Coleman's patents had refused to employ you. This publication also exposed your scheme to graft on the public through a subscription.

"As I have said before you butted in to the Phagan case since you were not wanted and as a public official it became my duty to allow the publication of the Coleman affidavit, made without my knowledge, in order that the good people of this and other cities may not be imposed upon any further by such a grafter.

"Having exposed some of your numerous lies and your thorough unreliability I now leave you to your hallucinations."

"N. A. LANFORD."

Picture Frame Veils

(Vogue.)

With the larger hats of the summer a most becoming addition to the small things of the toilet is the "picture frame" veil. This veil comes in individual patterns made of Shetland wash silk in all colors. The novel thing about the veil is that the middle is of a plain octagon mesh, while the sides are in a pretty scroll pattern. The veils are of silk, they stand constant washing and are quite inexpensive.

The bulletin says that in the year 1912 for the first time in the history of the United States 20 per cent.

Vanity is responsible for many things that are useful and beautiful, among them a hair curler and waver which is not injurious and which will curl the hair in a few minutes without heat. The curler is made like a clasp pin or barrette. The lower part is a circular metal bar, over which the hair is to be wound. The part on which the curler comes explains the different methods for waving and for curling. Two curlers come on a card for 19

STRANGE TANGLE ABOUT THIS BOY GETS WORSE

Evidence Shows That Little Robert Dunbar Isn't He at All

NEW ORLEANS, June 7.—Further evidence in support of the contention of W. C. Walters that the boy found in his possession at Columbia, Miss., several weeks ago, is not Robert Dunbar, who disappeared from his home in Opelousas, La., last August, was introduced at a special hearing to investigate the boy's identity here today.

Six witnesses, all residents of Pearl River county, Miss., testified that the child recovered from Walters, and claimed by C. P. Dunbar as his missing son, was with the itinerent tinker in that vicinity several weeks before the Dunbar boy's disappearance.

At the sight of only one of the witnesses did the five-year-old boy, brought here from Opelousas for the hearing, show any signs of recognition.

When Jeptha Bilbo appeared, the child, in reply to a question, said:

"That's Bilbo."

Bilbo testified that Walters and the boy, known as Bruce Anderson, spent several days at his home in July last.

Today's hearing was held at the request of Governor Earl Brower, of Mississippi, who refused to honor requisition papers from Louisiana for Walters, held at Columbia, suspected of kidnaping Robert Dunbar, until further investigation had been made.

Besides Jeptha Bilbo, those who identified the boy today as the same that accompanied Walters last July were Mrs. Jeptha Bilbo, Mr. and Mrs. N. A. Goldman and Mr. and Mrs. George Wiley.

"A cynic, my son, is a man who doesn't believe that singers always have colds."

WANTED AT ONCE

is the warning written upon the railroad crossings. "Be sure you are right and then go ahead" was the timely admonition of David Crockett.

Ask any well informed man in what part of the state was the wagon loads of gold when the war ceased? In what part of the state was many of the important documents signed? From what county in Georgia come the most illustrious statesmen? From whence sprang so glorious a religious movement that spread all over our Southland? They will tell you, the grand old county of Wilkes. With her splendid climate and without big talk. With farming lands not excelled in the United States, lands which will produce anything, and as much of it as you can find anywhere. We ask you to while we tell you what we want.

"Stop, Look, Listen"

It is a very rare thing that you find a foot of this fine land owned by a negro. It is mostly large tracts owned by the old fashioned white gentlemen. Hence the splendid schools and churches. Having autos and other modern conveniences, we have not cared to have the railroads run through our lands. But feeling ourselves somewhat selfish, we have decided to open our gates and invite good white people to come and share the good things with us. We are completing a standard railroad from Elberton to Tignall, better known as "Little Atlanta." Tignall, with her high school, banking facilities, churches and large mercantile plants, is already the "hub." But we are going to build a real city. Building lots for homes and business that have already been purchased tell the good news. Warehouses, brick plants, oil mills, new bank, several new stores, lumber mills and prospective shops of various kinds are in progress of erection as material can be had.

What We Want

Now, what we want is a dry goods store, tailoring establishment, cigar factory, dress making and millinery establishment, fruit and country produce dealer, jewelry store, furniture store, hardware store (first-class) and many other classes of business.

We will sell you from one building lot to a thousand acres of land. If you are interested in a proposition that will make you money, if you are good folks, for we are not going to build our town of any kind of people who have a little money. Then "Be sure you are right, then go ahead." Remember, "Time and tide waits for no man." Write to

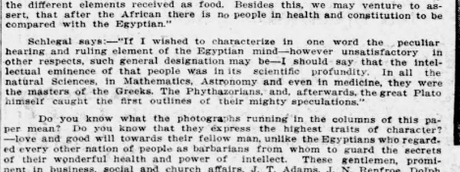
of How to Secure
Health and Efficiency



Herodotus says of the Egyptians—

"To give some idea of their mode of life; for three days successively in every month they use purges, vomits and clysters. This they do out of attention to their health, being persuaded that the diseases of the body arise from the different elements received as food. Besides this, we may venture to assert, that after the African there is no people in health and constitution to be compared with the Egyptian."

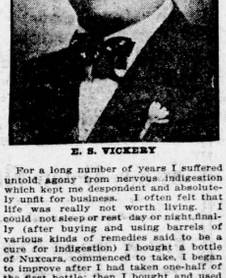
Schlegel says—"If I wished to characterize in one word the peculiar bearing and ruling element of the Egyptian mind—however unsatisfactory in other respects, such general designation may be—I should say that the intellectual eminence of that people was in its scientific profundity. In all the Natural Sciences, in Mathematics, Astronomy and even in medicine, they were the masters of the Greeks. The Phythazorians, and, afterwards, the great Plato himself caught the first outlines of their mighty speculations."

Do you know what the photographs running in the columns of this paper mean? Do you know that they express the highest traits of character?—love and good will towards their fellow man, unlike the Egyptians who regarded every other nation of people as barbarians from whom to guard the secrets of their wonderful health and power of intellect. These gentlemen, prominent in business, social and church affairs, J. T. Adams, J. N. Renfroe, Dolph Walker, Walter Inglis, A. J. Davis, Richard Whitney, J. W. Brooks, T. M. Word, E. S. Vickery and others who are to follow, proclaim to the world the glad tidings of the achievement of science over the crude practices of 4,000 years ago in seeking health and efficiency. These photographs express the most exalted attributes of character in reaching out a helping hand to those struggling with affliction and adversity. See these gentlemen and talk to them, you will find them high toned, genial, big minded fellows, ready to reach out to help some one over the rough places.

MORAL—Imitate the wisdom and kindness expressed in the photographs. The wisdom in taking Nuxcara yourself, and the kindness to tell others about it.

Price Full Treatment, 6 bottles for $5.00; 3 Bottles, $2.50; Single Bottles, $1.00.

Mr. J. H. Shelnut at Coursey & Munn's, 29 Marietta street, will be on hand daily to explain the merits of this wonderful medicine. Also for sale by Edmondson Drug Co., 11 North Broad street, 106 N. Fryor street.



E. S. VICKERY

For a long number of years I suffered untold agony from nervous indigestion which kept me despondent and absolutely unfit for business. I often felt that life was really not worth living. I could not sleep or rest day or night, finally (after buying and using barrels of various kinds of remedies said to be a cure for indigestion) I bought a bottle of Nuxcara, commenced to take, I began to improve after I had taken one-half of the first bottle; then I bought and used three additional bottles which effected a complete cure. I consider Nuxcara the finest medicine for indigestion that the world has ever produced. It is a God send to every person suffering with stomach trouble.

Yours truly,
E. S. VICKERY.

DR. GEORGE R. EDMONDSON BUYS BIG DRUG STORES

Popular Druggist Becomes Owner of Frank Edmondson & Brother Business

One of the important deals in commercial circles during the past week was the purchase of the Frank Edmondson & Brother drug stores by Dr. George R. Edmondson.

Dr. George Edmondson has been associated with his brother Dr. Frank Edmondson, for fourteen years in the retail drug business in Atlanta. Dr. Frank has sold his interest in the business and Dr. George becomes the sole owner of the two big stores. The business will be operated in the future as Edmondson Drug company.

The organization of this well known business concern dates back twenty years, when it was established as Goldsmith & Edmondson. Five years later it became Frank Edmondson & Brother. Under this name it has operated until the present.

Dr. George Edmondson came to Atlanta from LaGrange, entering business with his brother on his arrival in this city. He has displayed a wonderful lot of good business tact. This with courteous treatment and a determined desire to please has made him and his place of business universally popular. He and Dr. Frank begun business on Broad street in a modest but business-like manner. From the little drug store they have grown until today Dr. George Edmondson is at the head of two of the largest and most modern retail drug houses in the city, located at No. 11 North Broad street and 106 North Pryor.

Dr. Edmondson states that they will continue to feature their prescription department at each of the stores. This particular phase of the business has added greatly to the popularity of the stores. All prescriptions are compounded by capable and long experienced druggists.

Another feature will be that of the delivery service. Dr. Edmondson states that deliveries will be made promptly to any part of the city.

Dr. George Edmondson through honest dealings, good service, and courteous treatment has won the esteem and confidence of countless hundreds of Atlantians all of whom will learn with delight of his upward step in the business world, by purchasing these two well known drug houses.

INDUSTRIAL BUSINESS OF CHEROKEE IS SOLD

American Life of Galveston Takes Over Policies of Rome Company

According to reliable information made public last night, the American National Life Insurance company, of Galveston, will take over the industrial business of the Cherokee Life Insurance company, of Rome, recently reorganized as a stock company as the result of litigation carried on in the Fulton courts.

No figures are given on the sale, it is understood, because the consideration is based upon premiums collected by the American Life on the business transacted. The Cherokee company, recently made a stock organization with a capital of $100,000, will continue to write life insurance.

The deal, kept secret because of the fact that the actual transfer has not been made, is a direct result of the receivership suits recently brought against the Cherokee by holders of interest-bearing certificates dissatisfied with its management.

SALE TO HELP CHEROKEE.

According to information received from Rome late last night, President Barry Wright and Agency Manager Lloyd Damron declare that the ordinary life business of the Cherokee company amounts to $10,000,000 yearly and that the proceeds of the sale will increase the company's surplus by $300,000.

Several months ago Judge Rufus Hutchens, representing holders of certificates in the Cherokee, filed suit in Fulton superior court asking for a receiver. Numerous local persons interested on the suit. It is understood that satisfactory settlements were made in the majority of instances, but the disposition of the suit is still pending.

The first hearing was postponed at the request of Barry Wright, general counsel for the company, so that he might be present at his own wedding.

The American company is said to be a strong organization with a large business in the south and southwest. The acquisition of the industrial business of the Cherokee is certain to strengthen the company in this section.

GEORGIA EDITORS MEET IN LAGRANGE JULY 22-23

Date of Meeting Changed From July 15-16—Outing at St. Simons

The date for the annual meeting of the Georgia Weekly Press association, to be held at LaGrange, has been changed from July 15 and 16 to July 22 and 23.

This change was made necessary by reason of the fact that the members of the association will go to Brunswick and St. Simons Island for their annual outing and they find it will be impossible to arrange the trip to Brunswick for the week of July 15 because all the railway equipment to that city will be required at that time to handle the troops of the Fifth regiment, which holds its annual encampment at St. Simmons.

The announcement of the change in dates was made Saturday afternoon following a conference between President C. M. Methvin, Corresponding Secretary H. M. Stanley, E. Y. Clarke, of the LaGrange chamber of commerce; J. A. Perry, of the LaGrange Reporter, and Roy McGinty, of the LaGrange Graphic.

With the exception of the change in dates the original plans for the big gathering will be carried out.

REV. W. R. HENDRIX BACK IN HIS PULPIT TODAY

Wesley Memorial Pastor Will Preach at Both Services

Rev. W. R. Hendrix, pastor of Wesleyan Memorial church, will be in his pulpit at both services today for the first time in several weeks, and the large congregation will welcome a return of his interesting and helpful sermons.

On last Sunday Mr. Hendrix preached the commencement sermon at Martha Washington college, in Virginia, and on the previous Sunday the Wesley Memorial pulpit was occupied by Presbyterian ministers attendant upon the general assemblies.

For the summer months Mr. Hendrix and the assistant pastor, Rev. L. Wilkie Collins, will outline a special program of services in which stereoptican slides and perhaps motion pictures will be features.

A Parliament of Women

(Special Cable to The Journal.)

LONDON—Certainly the women must do something.

By the women I mean all those who claim their share in the conduct of public affairs.

A year or two ago that claim was making steady advance towards being generally considered reasonable. Of those who guide the nation's mental processes almost all were agreed that the claim of the women could not be withstood. Women who were taxed could not be denied representation. The subversion of the country to that view was just a matter of time.

Today all the ground which was gained by years and years of patient effort has been lost. Something in reward of that effort was in sight. The brains of the nation, into which the reasonableness of the claim was quietly permeating, has become violently hostile. At this moment it would be impossible for either party to alter the constitution in the sense the women desire. The country would not have it.

That is why I say that certainly the women must do something. They have to win back the ground they won before and have so utterly lost. They have to change the temper of the country. Some striking maneuver is necessary.

If they have any wisdom, any imagination, any sense of strategy, they will take up the idea of a women's parliament that has been offered them at every moment of their most urgent need.

Effective Sunday, May 25. Popular excursions to Warm Springs via A., B. & A. Only $1.00 round trip. Train leaves Union Station 8:00 a. m. Delightful outing.

ACCIDENTAL MEETING RESULTS IN WEDDING: ALDINE CHAMBERS AND MISS HATTIE SPEERS ARE MARRIED

Former Councilman and Bride, Principal of Forrest Avenue School, Leave on Honeymoon After Quiet Ceremony Performed Saturday

Aldine Chambers, ex-councilman and ex-candidate for mayor, and Miss Hattie Speers, former principal of Forrest avenue school, were married yesterday afternoon at the home of the bride's father, W. Jay Speers, 62 East Merritts avenue.

Rev. H. M. DuBose, D. D., pastor of First Methodist church, performed the ceremony. The bride and groom left at once for an extended honeymoon trip over the great lakes and down the St. Lawrence.

The engagement was not formally announced and the ceremony was attended by only the family and immediate friends.

Miss Speers was in her place at Forrest avenue school until Friday afternoon, when the school season closed.

However, information of her plans leaked out among the school teachers some time ago and forthwith began a lively and interesting contest for the principalship, which was won by Miss Lella J. Garcia, assistant principal of Ivy street school.

MET BY CHANCE.

The circumstances which brought Mr. Chambers and Miss Speers together were quite unusual, not to say romantic.

Last fall Miss Speers took a notion that she would get the Forrest avenue school lot graded and sodded with grass, even if she didn't have enough money in her appropriation.

So she set out for the office of Colonel W. R. Daley, president of the board of education. Finding him out, but Mr. Chambers, his law partner, in, she incidentally mentioned what she was after.

With your permission, I might be of some assistance to you," said Mr. Chambers, or words to that effect; and Miss Speers, having "heard talk" of Mr. Chambers' political influence, accepted his offer.

Immediately and without more ado, they got busy. Across the hall of the Grant building, on the same floor, they found Captain George M. Hope, a member of the board of education, who promptly agreed that he would help in the worthy cause.

From there they went to see other members of the board of education, and then to Shelby Smith, chairman of the county board, and their canvass got results.

SCHOOL LOT IS GRADED.

In a few days the county convict gang, which happened to be at work in the neighborhood, graded down the Forrest avenue school lot to a nicety, and when it came to sodding, and building retaining walls, and various other embellishments, the board of education (thanks to that canvass) managed to increase the appropriation a little, so that Miss Speers could get what she needed.

From this auspicious and happy beginning Mr. Chambers and Miss Speers very naturally developed a friendship, and it wasn't long before Mr. Chambers was a regular caller, and then—it began to be whispered around that the school department was in danger of losing one of its most efficient and attractive principals.

BRIDE IS ATTRACTIVE.

Miss Speers is both of these. She is a decided brunette, with a radiant smile which she doesn't keep to herself, and a happy, vivacious personality. As principal of Forrest Avenue school she won the popularity of teachers and children alike, and she has a host of friends who consider Mr. Chambers a very lucky man.

Mr. Chambers served four years in council from the Ninth ward, making a record of which his friends are proud. He was last fall a candidate for mayor in two hard fought primaries, a second being necessary to decide the issue, and had the support of many prominent Atlanta citizens. He is an attorney, a steward in Wesley Memorial church, and has a very wide circle of friends.

Dentist Victim Not Liable for Action Says Judge Preston

A dentist who fills a man's tooth with such a concoction as to make him (the man) lose control of his mental facilities is responsible for any unlawful act that the man commits.

So ruled City Recorder Pro Tem Preston Saturday afternoon, in trying the case of George Watson, colored, charged with disorderly conduct.

Watson was arrested by two emergency policemen who had been summoned to his home in Piedmont avenue Friday evening. He was throwing stones at nearly everybody that passed his house.

In court Watson admitted his guilt but blamed the onession on a dentist. "Jedge, that man put somethin' in mah tooth that made me want to throw stones at everybody I saw," said the negro. Other members of his household declared that only once before had George been guilty of a like indiscretion, and that was just after he had visited the same dentist. Watson was dismissed by the court.

POISONOUS TABLETS

Again Taken by Mistake!

From the Washington Times May 25, 1913.

Another Fight Against Bichloride of Mercury

CHICAGO, May 24.—W. L. McCutcheon, an automobile salesman, who took three bichloride of mercury tablets, thinking they were aspirin, will not know for a week whether his mistake carries a death sentence. McCutcheon's case is almost identical with that of R. Sanders Walker, the Macon, Ga., banker, except in the amount of the dose. McCutcheon took three tablets of 61-64 grains each, while the Georgia man swallowed seven grains.

McCutcheon complained of feeling ill, and a friend suggested that he take some aspirin tablets. He took three from a box he believed to contain aspirin. He noticed a burning in his throat immediately after, and an investigation showed he had taken the mercury.

Dr. G. A. Haas said that at least five days would be necessary before it could be told how seriously the kidneys were affected.

The news item reproduced here cites only one of the many cases where poisonous antiseptic tablets have been taken by mistake with disastrous results. Incidents of this kind are precluded by the use of

Ruptured People---

Try This For Relief and Cure

Only Thing Good Enough To Stand a 60-Day Test

Here is something you can try sixty days—just as a test—without having to risk a cent.

Something which in the last twenty-four years has saved thousands of ruptured people from having to undergo operation.

Something so strengthening to the ruptured parts that you can work right along without the slightest danger—

Something absolutely guaranteed to keep rupture from coming out—if it doesn't it won't cost you a single penny.

You Don't Have to Risk A Penny

We don't ask you to pay out a penny on the strength of any mere promise or claims.

We will make you a guaranteed rupture holder especially for your case—make it to your measure—and let you try it sixty days.

Let you give it a thorough test without asking you to risk a cent.

If it doesn't keep your rupture from coming out or bothering you in any way—if it doesn't prove every claim we make—then you can send it back and it won't cost you a cent.

See What It Does

This guaranteed rupture holder—the famous Cluthe Automatic Massaging Truss—is made on an absolutely new principle. It is far more than just a truss.

You see this truss—unlike all others—is self-adjusting, self-regulating.

The support it gives automatically increases when there is any sudden movement or strain—as in working—so no strain can force your rupture out.

And, in addition, the Cluthe Truss provides the only way ever discovered for overcoming the weakness which is the real cause of rupture.

Just how it does that—entirely automatically—is all explained in our free book.

300,000 People Have Tested It

The Cluthe Truss has such a remarkably strengthening and beneficial effect that it has cured some of the worst cases on record—

Among them men and women 50 to 70 years old, who had been ruptured from 20 to 50 years.

Cured many of them after everything else, including operation, had failed to do any good.

No Belt—No Leg-Straps—No Springs

The Cluthe Truss does away entirely with belts, leg-straps and springs. People who have tried it say it is as comfortable as their clothing. It is water-proof—will hold in the bath. Also perspiration-proof and easily kept clean.

Get World's Greatest Rupture Book

So that you can judge for yourself, we want to send you a free book we have written—a clothbound book of advice, which you who have read it—including physicians—say it is the best book ever written on Rupture.

It sums up all we have learned about rupture in forty years of day-after-day experience. It deals with rupture in all its forms and stages. Explains the dangers of operations. Shows why wearing elastic or spring trusses is sooner or later almost sure to shorten your life. And it exposes the humbug "appliances," "methods," "plasters," etc. Puts you on guard against throwing money away.

It shows why 60-days trial is the only safe way to buy anything for rupture, and how the Cluthe Truss is the only thing you can get on such a long trial, because the only thing good enough to stand such a thorough test.

And it tells all about the Cluthe Truss—how it ends constant expense—how you can try it 60 days, and how little it costs if you keep it. Also other voluntary endorsements sent with the book.

Write for it today—don't put it off—this book may be the means of adding many years to your life and of restoring you to full strength and usefulness.

Just use the coupon or simply say in a letter or postal "Send me the Book."

ALL GARBED IN GRAY, AD MEN START ON TRIP

Atlanta Ad Men's Club Is Off to Startle Baltimore and Advertise Atlanta

The members of the Atlanta Ad Men's club, garbed alike in neat gray suits, and wearing straw hats with sky blue bands upon which were written the magic word "Atlanta," left for Baltimore at 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon on the "Ad Men's Special, formerly known as the Birmingham special of the Southern railroad."

The delegation is headed for Baltimore not simply to attend but to make a big noise as well at the annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of America.

The fertile brains of the many members of the club have been active in the past few weeks thinking up stunts to startle Baltimore and to advertise Atlanta. The ad men declared that so good are some of the "stunts" that they can hardly wait until they reach the Maryland city to spring them.

The members of the Atlanta club traveled in four special cars, and a number of ladies were in the party.

The members of the club who are making the trip are:

BEAVERS WILL TELL ABOUT HIS CRUSADE

Armed with data on vice conditions in Atlanta and elsewhere, Chief of Police Beavers left for the annual meeting of the International Association of Police Chiefs in Washington Saturday afternoon. He will address the body on "The Social Evil."

The head of the local department is going to tell the police chiefs of the United States that one sure way of reducing crime and raising the moral standard of a city is to close all restricted districts. He was notified that he would be one of the principal speakers by the executive committee of the association several weeks ago.

The following from LaGrange, Ga., left on the same train with Chief Beavers: Chief of Police E. T. Reed, County Commissioner C. H. Griffin; Police Commissioner J. D. Hudson and C. B. Johnson, a business man. Chief of Police Pate Phelps, of Griffin, Ga., was also a member of the party, which will spend a day in Richmond, Va., before arriving at the national capital.

Superintendent of Police James W. Reynolds, of New Orleans, also passed through Atlanta Saturday on his way to Washington.

FRISCO RECEIVERS ISSUE STATEMENT

Charles A. Forrest, commercial agent of the St. Louis and San Francisco railroad and Chicago and Eastern Illinois railroad (Frisco lines) in Atlanta, Ga., which properties recently passed into receivership, has received the following circular from the receivers:

It is particularly desirable that every employe upon the Frisco pay roll shall impress every patron of the line and the public at large with the fact that the Frisco is a going institution and that it will not stop going.

The appointment of receivers of the property in no wise affects the day to day operations; the Frisco has been endeavoring to give all patrons good service; the same operating and traffic forces throughout will continue to serve the public just as carefully and just as well as in the past; it is even hoped by the receivers that the physical property and the character of the service shall be bettered from time to time.

The same earnest solicitation by the traffic representatives and the same painstaking care of the business after it has been secured will hold all of our old patrons and bring us others.

At 10 o'clock Monday morning the parade will form at the Cooper street show grounds in Brisbine park, and proceed toward the city. Its course will be down Cooper to Whitehall, to Peachtree, to Broad street, to Walton, to Marietta, to Broad again, to Mitchell, to Whitehall, to McDaniel and thence back to the park, where the afternoon performance will take place.

FRANK L. STANTON WRITES SONG FOR THE AD MEN

Georgia land—My Georgia Land!

From waving pines and muscadines
Georgia land! My Georgia Land!
Where many a cool mint garden shines,
Georgia land! My Georgia land!
Where violet-scented breezes pass
O'er cotton fields and wiregrass
You're where the julep brims the glass
Georgia land! My Georgia Land!

II

Where gold is gleaming high and low,
Georgia land! My Georgia land!
Where dollars like blackberries grow,
Georgia land! My Georgia Land!
Where buildings tower to the skies,
And where a million merchants rise
And burn the woods to advertise
Georgia land! My Georgia Land!

GAVE SKIN TO SAVE OTHERS, NOW NEEDS AID

NEW YORK, June 7.—Charles Kaplew, a young athlete who has several times recently given large areas of his skin for drafting operations on burned children, is himself in need of such sacrifice on the part of some one else.

The last patch removed—16 square inches—left a wound that has refused to heal and physicians decided that new skin would have to be procured. Several persons volunteered and the operation was to have been performed Monday.

In the meantime however, Kaplow's wife disappeared and no trace of her has been found. She was a trained nurse attracted to him by his heroism and they were married not long after he submitted to the first skin removal.

It was said at the flower hospital today that Kaplow's condition is serious.

BE INDEPENDENT through the parcel post. New mail order scheme guaranteed to win or money refunded. Nothing like this ever offered. Other schemes are worthless. Mine pays big worth? Absolutely nothing in most cases because they have been sent to death. My plan is brand new, one that's really "alive." I've been selling it many before I fumbled to myself, but have made surprising success out of my plan and am now ready to let others in on my big chance. I have spent much time and money perfecting this plan which I am cheerfully willing to get your co-operation. I'm not selling catalogues and letterheads nor a scheme to make a million in one year, but a legitimate selling scheme that may be applied by any business in spare time, with very little capital. Very good for the merchant to increase his sales and profits. Opportunity comes only to him who goes after it with that deep, burning, intense, iron resolve of life honest before him, and who will not say must to defeat, so must keep my promise. Now for your sake, for your success, for the sake of your family, for the sake of your entire future, for the sake of your happiness, peace of mind, pride, principle and your whole life's ambition, save time by sending $5 for complete course on money back guarantee and Mail your pay check Pals good-by forever. You can't get something for nothing. No time for curiosity seekers. Bingham "Mail Order Wizard," Box 287-A, Columbia, S. C. Don't write; my bank in city.

Poultry Keeping in the City

THIS is a strange thing to say, but nevertheless it is a fact that the average person in the city who keeps poultry pay by far more attention to their fowls, are more systematic in their methods of handling them, study the business more thoroughly, and as a rule, get far better results than the average farmer or person who keeps poultry on the farm. There are probably several reasons for this. In the first place a majority of the people who keep fowls in the city are ones who have a good business training and realize the importance of looking after and attending to little details, which is the secret and price of success in the poultry business. Therefore, they are close observers and most of them get results the same as they do in their daily line of business, or they cannot make it profitable. Strict accounts are usually kept of feed and other items of expense and one can usually tell where they are at all times with their venture. On account of the seed and fixtures all having to be bought they notice the expense attached to the business more so than the average person on the farm where a large part of the food is raised or where the chickens that are ordinarily kept on the farm have to secure their own food or live off of the waste behind live stock. At least fifty per cent of the chickens that are kept in the country and on the farm are not provided with comfortable or decent houses to stay in and they thrive under the most careless care and conditions. There are but few people on the farm who realize what their chickens are worth, or pay the attention to them that they should. There is a big chance in this respect and room for lots of work and a much greater change to be made. If the average person on the farm had to buy the feed like the man in the city does it would probably wake them up and they would themselves give more attention to this industry than they do, but the revenue derived, a large per cent of it from the poultry industry is a surplus or by-product that comes off of the farm and is rarely ever considered. That is one reason why so few farmers really know what their poultry is worth to them.

The city person who is forced to keep fowls to help keep down the expense of daily living has brought about many discoveries, and much valuable information gained that would have never been heard of had it not been for the city fanciers. This information has been of untold value to the farmer, and also to the fancy breeder. I am glad to say that a number of people who are keeping chickens in the cities are increasing every day. Most of them have found it profitable, pleasant and healthful and when good thoroughbred varieties and only a limited number of them are kept by the average city person they not only get profits but lots of pleasure out of their work. They tell their neighbors and friends of their undertakings and many take up this work by being encouraged by what their neighbors have done. The day is coming when a much larger number of city people will be keeping thoroughbred poultry than ever before. With the many methods of cheap housing, scientific feeding and wonderful change in egg production of the average hen of this day and time compared to what there was years ago it encourages many to keep chickens now that would have never thought of doing so fifteen to twenty years ago when it was almost impossible to secure a hen that would lay from four to six dozen eggs per year. Hundreds of hens are now being kept in cities that are producing fifteen to twenty dozen eggs each per year, and at a price of 30 cents per dozen and not over $1.25 required to keep the feed of keeping a hen of this kind you can readily see that there is a per cent of profit the little hen will pay its keeper. Most any city lot will support fifty hens and with a net profit of $3 per hen where eggs are used only for market purposes it is no trouble for many people to pick up $100 to $150 net per year from a few hens kept in the back yard, aside from the pleasure and recreation it affords them. Where eggs are used for the home and poultry raised for table use, which is a foregone conclusion that beef and packing house products of all kinds will remain high, much higher than they are at present for the next five years to come, this alone should encourage and force hundreds of people to keep poultry in the city lot that would not do so otherwise.

There is another reason why many city fanciers get better results than the average person in the country. As a rule they subscribe for and read all books and literature that will give them information on this subject. This is the cheapest way possible to secure a cheap education, by reading good literature, and as the daily and farm papers of the United States have seen and know the necessity of pushing this poultry work they have left no stone unturned to secure as much information as possible from the most successful breeders and have given to the public valuable information at a small cost that has certainly been helpful to hundreds of people. The poultry business a little different from any other can be learned in a short while by reading after successful men who it has cost a lifetime to get the knowledge that they are imparting to the general public. And, with a little common sense and judgment anyone can, with the literature now to be had, learn how to successfully and profitably keep a few fowls on the average city lot.

Yours very truly,

POULTRY FEED POULTRY FEED

WHAT SUCCESSFUL POULTRY PEOPLE ARE FEEDING

The most successful poultry people of today are raising their baby chicks on dry mash and are also feeding their laying hens on dry mash. There are yet, however, people who continue to feed heavily on grain, because they can buy a 100 pound bag of scratch feed (grain) for about $2.25 to $2.50 per cwt., while they cannot buy the best dry mash (Aunt Patsy's Pountry Feed) at that price per cwt., yet they overlook the fact that it requires at least 1 pound of grain for each hen per day; which at $2.50 per cwt., or 2 1-2c per pound, makes the scratch feed (grain) very expensive feeding. A hundred pound bag of Aunt Patsy will run 20 hens 30 days, on full feed, and at the cost of $3 per cwt., it cost only 1-2c per day, per hen, against 2 1-2c per day, per hen, to feed on scratch feed. Besides, the scratch feed only fattens the hen and produces very few eggs, while AUNT PATSY is, in every sense of the word, an egg producer.

All we ask is that you give Aunt Patsy a trial as compared with grain feeding, and convince yourselves that you will get more eggs from feeding Aunt Patsy than you will from the use of scratch feed, and at the same time you will feed your hens at about half the cost of feeding them on grain or scratch feed.

FOR RENT—HOUSES

FOR RENT

IN ANSLEY PARK, Inman Park, and West End all of these, our prettiest residence sections, we have some of the most attractive homes and bungalows that we have ever been able to offer, and nearly all of these are thoroughly modern, and up-to-date. It is needless to comment on the neighborhood, all having fine car service very convenient, and accompanied by the best schools and churches. Houses of this type seldom occupy space in a renting list. They are generally owned and occupied by their owners. So this is your chance to get an exceptional home at a very reasonable rent on account of the odd season.

DECATUR, GA.

IN THIS splendid residence town within twenty-five minutes' ride of the city, with two car lines, and four or five accommodation trains per day, we have three very attractive cottages, with all of the conveniences except gas, all in fine neighborhood, and convenient to the Agnes Scott college. Ranging in price from $22.50 to $30.00, and on the corner of Clairemont and Ponce de Leon, a well-planned modern, ten-room house, on a large beautiful corner lot, to prominent lease tenant we would make a most reasonable rental.

BUSINESS OR RESIDENCE

IF LOOKING for a business location we would suggest that you consult our list. For the season of the year we have one of the most attractive lists of houses that we have had for some time, ranging from anything from a simple three-room cottage to an elegant twelve-room house. We have a few business locations that strike us as being very desirable. Get our list.

FOSTER & ROBSON
11 EDGEWOOD AVE.

RENTING SERVICE

OUR LOCATION, our help, our facilities in general are such that we can probably give better service in the renting of property than any other agency in the city.

WE ENDEAVOR to be most courteous with everyone with whom we deal; we try in every way to keep right up with all the details that are daily arising; the repair work that is done through our office is done without a cent of profit to us; we endeavor to collect rent as promptly as possible without oppression; and we feel like that no agency is more successful in keeping houses tenanted. Give us a trial.

NORTH SIDE HOME BARGAINS

PEOPLE with five or six thousand dollars looking for north side homes have found out, if they have looked in any one of them, that it is almost impossible to get a home that resembles a good, substantial, close-in location for that amount of money. When the word PEACHTREE is mentioned you immediately think of a place from two thousand dollars on up, and that is usually the case.

ELEVENTH, Twelfth, Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets are about the finest north side residence section, for reasons that are familiar to all. On Twelfth street not over three hundred feet from Peachtree, between Eleventh, Fourteenth and West Peachtree, right in the apartment house section, we have one of the corner of Crew-cut areas of nice two-room cottages on lot 50x150 feet. This can be had for $5,500. We have also the next two cottages on lots 50x150 each, can be had for $5,500 and $5,000 respectively. Adjoining corner of Twelfth and Crescent on Crescent avenue we have another seven-room cottage on lot 54x150 feet, 20-foot alley on side and 10-foot alley in rear, that can be had for $4,500. On Thirteenth street, between Peachtree and Piedmont avenue, on lot 50x142 feet, we have a seven-room cottage, price $5,000; one-fourth cash can buy any of the above places mentioned, balance one, two and three months. These can hardly be beat either for homes or speculation and are well worth looking into.

Mr. Investor, Here Is an Opportunity for You to Make Some Money and Make It Quickly.

WE HAVE four lots on Tenth street, just where the Orme street sewer crosses, that we have been authorized to put on the market for an immediate sale. This property is worth $65 per front foot, but owner says he must sell and will consider a reasonable offer. Look at these four lots and make us an offer on them, for somebody is going to buy them cheap. Will sell on terms of one-third cash and balance in 1 and 2 years.

WE HAVE a 5-room cottage, 161 Bellwood avenue, which rents for $12.50 per month, but should rent for $17.50. Owner wants to convert his equity into money. The property would be cheap at $1,500, but if you will submit us an offer, you can buy it at reasonable price.

WE HAVE three 3-room cottages on Bellwood avenue, 217, 219, 221, with no encumbrance. Lots 35x108, and so arranged as to add two rooms to each house with a cost of $250 to $300, and they would then rent for $15.00 each. You can buy these cottages for $1,250 apiece, part cash and terms on balance.

WE HAVE two small store houses, corner of Bellwood and Oliver streets, lot 40x108, with room enough in rear fronting on Oliver street to build two small cottages. Rents for $15.00 per month. This property would be cheap at $1,750, but $1,350 will buy it, part cash and balance on terms.

WE HAVE a three-room cottage, corner of Fox and Lindsay streets, lot 38x110. House rents for $10.00, but ought to bring $12.50. This property cheap at $1,500, but for a quick turn $1,075 will buy it.

Here Is a Pick-Up for Somebody Who Has a Little Money to Invest

WE HAVE a house on W. Mitchell street, corner lot 45x100, with beautiful shade, in one of the best colored sections of Atlanta, an excellent location for a colored apartment house, or rather two stores and eleven apartments, which would easily bring an income from rentals amounting to $125 per month. We have had estimates and stores and apartments can be built for $2,500. The lot as it stands, with three-room cottage on it, can be bought for $900. This property is a pick-up for some one who wants to build an apartment and rent to the best colored people of the city.

ALL OF THE above property belongs to one party who has decided he wants to convert it into money, and if you will go and look at it and make an offer on the whole you can buy a bargain.

WE HAVE a beautiful bungalow on Myrtle street, lot elevated about 4 or 5 feet above street, 50x150. All modern conveniences, with bookcases and china closets built into house. Prettily designed in every way. We offer this property for $8,000 on easy terms.

WE HAVE the prettiest bungalow in North Atlanta, located on W. Tenth street, near the W. Peachtree car line, 6 rooms, servant's room, and basement large enough for laundry, trunk room, etc., furnace heat and all modern improvements. Every closet door has a large dressing mirror. Furnishings in bath room are the prettiest to be seen anywhere; tintings and finish of walls cannot be equalled, in fact, it is simply an ideal bungalow in every particular. Let us show you this and you cannot help but be pleased.

SMALL SALES.

Some small sales were announced yesterday. M. C. Kiser's agency has sold for L. H. Zurline to E. F. Brown No. 171 Waverly way, a six-room house on a lot 56x140, for $5,000.

REVIEW OF THE WEEK.

In the absence of a ticker arrangement by which a daily record could be kept of real estate sales and comparisons made, as in the stock market, reliance has to be placed on how agents and traders who follow the business for a livelihood feel about it and talk.

The feeling the past week has been very much better, and it was backed up, moreover, by the announcement of a fair assortment of sales. There are more sales, held up at present for title examination, that should come out shortly. It looks as if we would have almost spring activity in the summer.

Yesterday's announcements aggregated close to $100,000, with a similar amount a day or two before. The sales yesterday included the Gattins parcel on Marietta street, and the Clark and McBride sale of a building at Haynes and Hunter streets and an apartment house on Forrest avenue. A record volume of transfers also went to record, with several bonds for title, all new sales.

A significant announcement of yesterday was that one agency which specializes in subdivisions and vacant lots had increased its force of salesmen from forty to sixty men.

The two building permits for the L. & N. commission house quarters on Produce Row, and the new quarters of Marcus Loeb and company on Trinity avenue, which aggregated $248,000, had the effect of giving the June record a fine start, to say nothing of reducing the year's building deficit to something less than $350,000.

Yesterday's highly successful auction was another good indication. Above everything is the promise of a good cotton crop and a generally good business condition.

COLLEGE PARK DEAL.

R. B. Mahaffey, with M. L. Petty, has sold for C. W. Camp, of Marietta, a house and seven lots in College Park to a client for $5,000 cash. He has also sold for Mrs. A. R. Mayfield to P. W. Camp a lot on Whitehall street, with eight-room house for $6,000.00 This lot is fifty feet on Whitehall and 110 feet deep. It is near cordon street. Mr. Mahaffey has several trades in contract stage which will be closed up in a few days.

Pastor's World-Wide Tour

(Special Cable to The Journal.)

LONDON.—On June 27 the Rev. Dr. Walter Frederick Adeney, editor of the Century Bible, who is shortly retiring from the principalship of the Lancashire Independent college, Whalley Range, Manchester, will start on a two years' tour of the world. His plans are as follows, according to himself:

"It will be a tour partly of pleasure and partly of work.

"I want to do what I can to help our colonial and missionary churches.

"My wife and I will cross Canada to Vancouver, and I shall lecture at a theological conference in Victoria.

"We shall then proceed to San Francisco and sail from there to Sydney.

"It is probable that I will visit the churches of most of the principal towns of Australia and New Zealand, and I shall go to the meeting of the New Zealand Congressational union in February.

"Afterwards, by means of the missionary ship John Williams, I will visit the missionary stations of New Guinea and other South sea islands.

"I want particularly to see what missionary work the natives themselves can do, and how far possible it will be for them to carry on religious work without our help.

"What is wanted is a national, not an exotic christianity.

"In China and Japan especially—which countries I shall visit if my health keeps good—it is necessary that the work should be performed by natives."

Presidential Hospitality

(Special Cable to The Journal.)

PARIS.—Alphonse Freire can accept the presidential hospitality without premonitory qualms. Dinner at the Elysee is no longer an ordeal to be dreaded, as it was in the time of Monsieur Falliers, who is popularly supposed to have put by a fifty penny during his seven years of office. One paper states that he has just invested a million francs—forty thousand pounds, in "rentes," the French equivalent for consols; but it is only fair to say that French journalism has a fine reckless method of dealing with facts. Anyhow, these seven years were decidedly lean ones for the presidential table. But Monsier Poincare has changed all that. One of the first things he did on entering into his kingdom was to reorganize and reinforce the kitchen staff at the Elysee. He also overhauled the cellars which, rightly or wrongly, Monsier Falliere was suspected of replenishing from the rather sharp and watery vintages of his own vineyards.

WESTERN GOVERNORS MEET AT SALT LAKE

Government Control of Natural Resources Discussed at Meeting Saturday

(By Associated Press.)

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, June 7.—Today's sessions of the conference of western governors were devoted mainly to drafting an address to the public outlining what changes were considered advisable in government control of natural resources in order to obtain the highest efficiency.

Clay Tallman, commissioner of the land office, was the first speaker.

"I am not here to defend," he said, "in fact, I am not going to try to defend the actions of the department in the past. I am here as a construction-ist."

Commissioner Tallman asked a series of questions of the governors with a view of ascertaining the exact changes wanted. Especial attention was given to the position of the United States forest service, it being alleged by some of the governors that the administration of the service had discouraged mining and prospecting.

Mr. Tallman said that as far as he was concerned, if the prospector confined his work to actual prospecting and obeys the rules of the forest service there will be no disposition on the part of the administration to hinder, but every effort will be made to encourage.

There was a general discussion of national control of oil and mineral lands. Some of the governors took the position that blanket withdrawals should stop.

Both Assistant Jones and Commissioner Tallman indicated that the administration's policy would be the freest opening of all mineral and oil lands to the honest developers.

"BLACK BEAUTY" AND MISS POLLY SALUTE ATLANTA FOR BUFFALO BILL'S WILD WEST

Buffalo Bill's Wild West and Pawnee Bill's Far East are scheduled to show in Atlanta tomorrow afternoon and evening on the old Brisbine park show grounds on Cooper street.

Great things are promised for the two performances that Buffalo Bill's wild west and Pawnee Bill's far east shows will give here on June 9, next Monday, in the afternoon and evening. The shows will be tented on the new show ground, Brisbine park, on Cooper street.

Progressive reproduction of action, by the development of the moving picture film, has been a contagious fever in the last few years to an unprecedented degree in the public's desire for relief from the monotony of work-a-day life. It has produced millions of "movie fans," almost excelling the national craze for baseball. Among the most favored pictures are those of horse and rider, especially the western scenes of cowboy life, and that gyrating four-footed disturber, the wild bucking horse.

Among the assembled primitive people of the world who soon will visit Atlanta is an exhibition containing the originals and prototypes of the most sensational reels, Buffalo Bill's Wild West and Pawnee Bill's Far East. This is a chance for the devotees of the artificial to see and compare the original subjects—the natural.

The exhibition this year is rearranged, in fact is now an epitome of world history in the line of human, animal and the latest and greatest mechanical activity.

Over a quarter of a century ago the east was startled by the bringing to its door of an exhibition of co-existent peoples and contemporaneous history, the distinguished traits of which are action, action, action.

It was Buffalo Bill's Wild West and the people presented were, from force of habit, agile, nimble specimens of nature.

Later Major Lillie with his Far East founded on the same lines and conditions, joined, and this season the Wild West and the Far East are giving not only quantity but extraordinary quality as well.

Colonel Cody will appear personally and introduce his successor in a brief speech from his carriage, and will let Pawnee Bill lead the reveries on horseback, so that besides the "Two Bills," there are practically two exhibitions in one, with many marked changes calculated to give renewed interest in this aggregation.

All the well known realistic features and interesting people in their activities, in both sections, will be retained, and in each several novelties will evoke admiration.

Among these is the real auto-polo with the inventor, Mr. Boltz King, and his associates, who first developed it into a practical game in which the contestants risk life and limb in the most exciting manner possible. This feature must not be confused with any tame lawn tennis imitation that has been put into the field to detract from the merit and dignity of the skilful support.

An appropriate addition to the far east will be Max Gruber's sextet elephant act, led by the Siamese mammoth queen of trained elephants. "Minnie," the greatest of all pachyderm performances. Its intricacies demand skill, judgment and intelligence. The maneuvers not only will astonish the beholder, but will give food for future thought as to animal development in the sense of touch discretion in action and perfect comprehension of what is demanded and how to attain the results. The perfectly trained thoroughbred horse, "Excelsior," in a class by himself among equines, will compete with "Minnie" for admiration and plaudits, while the dandy little pony, "Peacock," will be in the running when horsemen discuss whose head shall be crowned with the laurel wreath of victory.

An old-fashioned fox-hunt with high jumping hurdlers, unrivaled winners of international horse shows, led by Shamrock, Stayaway and Sapolio, have been added to the world-covering horse exhibit; the Boris Fridkin Russian peasant dancers, a squad of boy scouts, the recruiting patrol, and other novelties will be other big features.

Boltz King has challenged any imitators for a contest for $10,000 a side.

The Indians, Cossacks, cowboys, Arabs, Japanese, United States cavalry, artillery, and the cavaliers and ranch girls will give an effective parade at 10:30 a. m., while the wild buckers, buffaloes, and many other attractive features will remain in camp, reserving every energy for the performances—two daily, at 2 and 8 p. m.

NEWS OF THE MOVIES

AT THE MONTGOMERY.

The reason for the tremendous crowds at every performance at the Montgomery the past week was Doc Baker, the wonderful character singer who has won so much favor in Atlanta in such a short time. Mr. Baker's singing is so far different from the usual run of singers and his songs are the latest New York and Chicago song hits. His character impersonations and his wardrobe are wonderful and his lightning wardrobe changes which he makes are marvelous, making them between each song so quick that you have to take more than one look to make sure that he is one and the same person.

Mr. Baker's engagement has been extended for an indefinite stay at the Montgomery, and the many patrons have a treat in store for them every day.

Tomorrow Mr. Baker will sing the New Rube Song, entitled "Oh, How She Dances."

"BUFFALO BILL" ISN'T SICK, SAYS DONALDSON

Advance Man of Wild West Show Says Col. Cody Will Appear Here

The report that Colonel William F. Cody, "Buffalo Bill," was seriously ill at Chattanooga, Tenn., has been knocked in the head by one of the agents of his show, J. T. Donaldson, who arrived in Atlanta Saturday evening fresh from a conference with his chief.

He reports that the colonel is not only convalescent, but that he never has been ill, and is very much alive and kicking at the present time.

"Colonel Cody is right now in the best shape that he has been in several years," says Mr. Donaldson. "He is only sixty-eight years of age, although his white hair and white goatee make him look somewhat older. He has quit the saddle, but when he gets here Monday he will appear in the show just the same as ever."

Rob and Burn Home

(By Associated Press.)

NEW YORK, June 7.—In the absence of the family robbers entered the home of John Beslon on Staten island early today, blew open a safe containing $5,000 in jewels and money and set fire to the house and fled. The residence was wrecked.

Neighbors saw three men step from a black touring car and go into the house but thought that they were calling on the family. The robbery was not discovered until after the arrival of firemen.

MONEY IN ONION CROP FOR PUTNAM FARMER

EATONTON, Ga., June 7.—A former Floridian, Captain J. M. Boone, for many years a conductor on the Florida East Coast railway, with headquarters at Fernandina, who has made his home in Putnam for several years past, has proven that there is money in onions for Georgia farmers, the cost of production comparing favorably with that of other market crops. On his farm two miles out from the city, Mr. Boone has a patch of Bermuda onions from which he is gathering this year an average of 400 bushels to the acre, with a market value of $1 per bushel. Several specimens were on exhibition in town this week ranging from four to six inches in diameter.

HERE IS THE EVIDENCE

Prominent Atlanta Citizens Give Splendid Testimony

Some ten weeks ago Thomas Y. Young, a noted Chinese herbalist and graduate of one of China's most noted Medical Institutions, gave notice to the people of Atlanta that he would open an herb store at 55 Houston street, in Atlanta and promised immediate relief to all those who were suffering and who would give his ancient Chinese remedies a fair trial.

Immediately upon opening hundreds who were ailing with all manner of human complaints, which the best American physicians failed to cure, called at the Oriental Herb Co.'s shop for treatment.

RESULT

These remedies have been employed by scientists of the Far East, successfully for thousands of years.

The truth is that these ancient Chinese herbs, roots and barks are natural medicines. They are the basis of all our modern American medicine compounds. We sell you direct the herbs, barks, roots and other valuable vegetable essences from which modern and high priced compounds are made. By selling these herbs and roots we give you for one-seventh the price you pay elsewhere, the pure, unadulterated base of the medicine you need. After all, the best evidence of the worth of anything is proved by the result.

Among the hundreds who took advantage of our opening offer was Col. Joseph H. Whidby, an old and prominent resident of Atlanta. His story brings a cheerful message to his many friends, heralding his phenomenal recovery, and bearing a message of hope to thousands of fellow sufferers in Georgia.

ATLANTA, Ga., May 20th, 1913.

To Thomas Y. Young,
The Oriental Herb Co., 55 Houston Street, City.
Dear Doctor Young:

For over ten years I have suffered from stomach and bladder trouble and I have had impure and bad blood. For years and years I suffered intense pain through my entire system. I had spent a fortune trying to cure myself, using various treatments and remedies from all over the country. This all seemed in vain and never did me any good.

I was on the point of giving up all hope and was despondent and worried and did not know what to do, when, one day, a friend of mine recommended to me a trial of your Chinese remedies. He told me the Oriental Herb Shop, full of wonderful and tried Chinese remedies, was located in Atlanta at No. 55 Houston street, and that he believed these Chinese herbs and roots properly taken, would cure me. I thought I would take a chance and give them a trial.

After taking one month's treatment my whole system is built up to its normal condition and I feel like a new man. Therefore, I can earnestly say to the bottom of my heart that I am cured of all my troubles, sufferings and diseases. I publish this statement for the benefit of the public that other cases may be cured permanently and others relieved from suffering, because only those who have suffered as I have can know how happy I am over my recovery.

Yours truly,
349 Terry street, Atlanta, Ga. J. H. WHIDBY.

If you are suffering! If you can't get well! If you have abandoned all hope of happiness and good health! Why not take this key to "The Door of Hope in the House of Health" that Colonel J. H. Whidby points out to you?

TO GIVE OLD HEN A BEAUTIFUL PLUMAGE

(By Associated Press.)

WASHINGTON, June 7.—Fowl fanciers and experts in the bureau of animal industry are sending some method of breeding whereby the unattractive but useful hen can sprout plumage as variegated as Joseph's coat of many colors. The activity of the experts is inspired by the fact that many states are passing stringent laws against the destruction of birds for their plumage, while several federal laws prohibiting the traffic in such plumage already are in effect.

The bird division of the National museum also has the matter under consideration, but it is inclined to believe that the evolution of the common hen along the lines desired is scarcely practicable.

"It might be accomplished," said one of the museum scientists facetiously, "by hatching the eggs in a dye house. It might also be accomplished by feeding the chickabiddies on Prussian blue and other vari-colored paint powders instead of corn or other grain. One you know never can tell what might happen in such a truly scientific experiment."

The bureau of animal industry, however, is taking the matter more seriously, and is casting about for some solution of the subject.

SENATORS MAKE ISSUE UPON INDIAN AFFAIRS

WASHINGTON, June 7.—Demands of Senator Lane, of Washington, that the Indian affairs committee of the senate get complete statements as to how all Indian funds are administered, before acting on the $10,000,000 Indian appropriation bill now pending, opened up an Indian fight that probably will be carried onto the floor of the senate.

Senator Lane proposed to ask the committee Monday to authorize only temporary appropriations for the Indians and to institute at once an investigation of the Indian bureau.

Other committee members declared it was impossible to get the detailed statement, and that the bill would be recommended for passage early next week. The Indian bill contains a provision for a complete investigation of the Indian bureau, the Indian service and the administration of all funds.

SURRENDERS TO FRIEND FOR REWARD OF $250

(By Associated Press.)

WINCHESTER, Ky., June 7.—One good turn deserves another, is the philosophy that a man giving his name as Shade McIntosh acted on, according to his story, when he sought an interview with Jailer Mullins here last night and confessed to him that he was wanted for murder and that a reward of $250 for his capture was the jailer's for the asking.

McIntosh was arrested on a charge of drunkenness and was turned over to Mullins, who treated him so kindly, he said, that he resolved to confess to him and allow his benefactor to claim the reward. The man is said to have killed Robert Murphy at Heidelburg, near here, three weeks ago. When arrested for drunkenness he gave his name as Frank Bagley.

Tim Sullivan Sails

(By Associated Press.)

NEW YORK, June 7.—Congressman Timothy D. Sullivan was booked as a passenger on the steamer Cincinnati sailing today from Boston for Hamburg. "Big Tim," the East Side leader of Tammany, expects to make the round trip on the steamer for the benefit of his health. He was recently committed to a sanitarium on account of an alleged mental affliction, but this, as well as his physical health, he declared to be much improved. He hopes to resume his political interests in the fall.

UNCLE SAM IS PRINCE OF ENTERTAINERS

(By Associated Press.)

WASHINGTON, June 7.—Through the award of contracts for several thousand feet of motion picture films, it became known today that the United States government is engaged in the moving picture business on a big scale. The enterprise is being carried on by the reclamation service in its camps in the west, which have been established in connection with great irrigation projects and other engineering work. The "movies" furnish their part in the general scheme to keep the workmen and their families, isolated from the world, contented and happy.

According to an official statement, in all the large camps meeting halls are erected and a general club is established, usually under the supervision of a representative of the Y. M. C. A. The government furnishes books and daily papers, and likewise provides lectures and engages the services of other entertainers for the workers.

The hall is also used for dances and for other entertainments, but the moving pictures form one of the chief features of the entertainment supplied by the government, the films being passed from camp to camp.

TENNESSEE CAN NOT CONDEMN REELFOOT

(By Associated Press.)

NASHVILLE, Tenn., June 7.—A Jackson, Tenn., special says that the Tennessee supreme court here today decided the Reelfoot lake case involving the title to the famous hunting and fishing resort in west Tennessee.

The court held the original grant from North Carolina, the mother state of Tennessee, could not be vested from the West Tennessee Land company by the state, but the title to the remainder of the lake was vested in the state of Tennessee and that the lake is navigable in a technical legal sense. The object of the proceedings was to have the state acquire the lake by condemnation proceedings. Chief Justice Neil dissented.

State-Line Pine Gone

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

WEST POINT, Ga., June 7.—Lightning last night struck and killed the old state line pine tree near the News office. This old sentinel has been the accepted designation of the dividing line between Georgia and Alabama for more than a century. Guests in the Lisle hotel were shocked, and window lights in nearby buildings were broken out.

REBELS THREATENED WITH EXTERMINATION

(By Associated Press.)

EAGLE PASS, Tex., June 7.—A letter purporting to be issued by the Huerta minister of war in Mexico City, warning constitutionalists to lay down their arms at once, reached here today. The warning threatened constitutionalists with being "pertinaciously punished until they are exterminated without pity."

Federal forces south of Monclova, Mexico, are reported to have retired to Monterey or Satillo.

WEATHER BUREAU OFFICIAL PUTS GREAT CREDENCE IN "SAYIN'S" OF PROPHET OF VILLAGE STORE

Government Scientists, After Study of Proverbs of the Weather, Declare Many of Them Have Big Degree of Reliability—Here Are Some of the Good Ones

BY RALPH SMITH.

WASHINGTON, June 7.—Scientists in the weather bureau have been studying the weather proverbs, and have come to the conclusion that many of them have a degree of reliability that is quite startling. Unlike the scientific forecasts, however, these proverbs are based on local observations and apply to local conditions.

The weather bureau has a horizon that is as broad as a continent, or even the world, while the village forecaster, depending on the sky, the sun, the moon, the stars or the winds, has an outlook as wider than the physical horizon which shuts him in. Generations and even centuries of experience have crystallized the observations of these village-to-village forecasters into the form of the proverbs which are familiar to the public at large, and given to a number of them a degree of reliability that is not to be questioned.

In many places, chiefly the rural communities, it is impossible to get, in time for use, either the official forecast of the weather bureau, or the weather map accompanying it, and under these conditions it is pointed out that certain weather signs are of special value.

W. J. Humphreys, A. M., Ph. D., professor of meteorological physics in the weather bureau, who has just contributed a highly interesting chapter to the literature of weather proverbs, denies the crude but shrewd wisdom that is back of many of them. He notes that deep sea fishermen will weigh anchor and flee from a gathering storm when to the casual onlooker there is no sign of such storm, and that the woodsman will note significant changes in the surrounding when the average man would be conscious of no change.

"The prescience of these men," says Dr. Humphreys, "is phenomenal, "and then he proceeds to a consideration of some of the proverbs which go to make up the wisdom on which such people rely for guidance in weather matters.

SOME OF THE PROVERBS.

Some of these proverbs attempt to forecast conditions for an entire growing season, and when they deal with results rather than with types of weather, Dr. Humphreys says they are frequently rationally founded. Take, for instance, this proverb:

Frost year,
Fruit year.

Or to state it in another form:

Year of snow,
Fruit will grow.

Or put in still another form:

A year of snow, a year of plenty.

"That these and similar statements are commonly true," says Dr. Humphreys, "is evident from the fact that a more or less continuous covering of snow, incident to a severe winter, not only delays the blossoming of fruit trees till after the probable season of killing frosts, but also prevents that alternate thawing and freezing so ruinous to wheat and other winter grains. In short, as another proverb puts it, 'a late spring never deceives.'

"A different class of proverbs, but meaning practically the same thing, and justified by substantially the same fact—that an unseasonably early growth of vegetation is likely to be injured by later freezing—is illustrated by the following:

"January warm, the Lord have mercy.

"If you see grass in January,

PROVERBS OF SUN, MOON AND STARS.

Another series of proverbs forecast weather conditions from the appearance of the sun, moon and stars and the sky, and, like the proverbs forecasting the season, some of them are built upon the sure foundation of accurate observation and correct reasoning. It is with these latter that Dr. Humphreys deals. A familiar proverb of this class is this:

A red sun has water in his eye.

Quantities of dust in a damp atmosphere produce a "red sun," or smoke, if of sufficient quantities, will do it. When the atmosphere is heavily charged with dust particles that are moisture-laden, we see the sun as a fiery ball. This dust has much to do with rainfall, for it has been scientifically demonstrated that cloud particles, and therefore rain, will not form, ordinarily, in a dust-free atmosphere, but will readily form when the atmosphere is damp. A red sun therefore commonly indicates the presence of both the essential rain elements—dust and moisture.

There are many proverbs, some good and useful and others misleading, concerning the color of the sky at sunset and sunrise. From Shakespeare are the following lines:

"A red morn that ever yet betokened
Wreck to the seamen, tempest to the field,
Sorrow to the shepherds, woe to the birds,
Gusts and foul flaws to herdsmen and to herds."

There are other and lighter lines conveying the same meaning, as, for instance:

"Sky red in the morning
Is a sailor's sure warning;
Red sky at night
Is the sailor's delight."

But in many ways the most interesting of all these proverbs that have to do with red sunrise and sunset, in the judgment of Dr. Humphreys, is the one which, according to the gospel of Matthew, Christ used in answer to the Pharisees and Sadducees when they asked Him to show them a sign from heaven.

"He answered and said unto them, When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather: for the sky is red.

"And in the morning, It will be foul weather today: for the sky is red and lowering.

"If will be noticed," comments Dr. Humphreys, "that an evening red sky is here declared to indicate exactly the opposite type of weather from that indicated by a morning red. This, however, is only an apparent contradiction, for the origin of the red is not the same in the two cases.

"If the evening sky low in the west, is yellowish or greenish, or some other short wave-length color, then look out for clear weather, for these colors, says Dr. Humphreys, indicate even less condensation and therefore a dryer air than does red. Hence, the following lines from Shakespeare express a general truth:

"The weary sun hath made a golden set,
And by the bright track of his fiery car
Gives token of a goodly tomorrow."

But if the evening sky is gray, then we may know that many water drops are present, and that the dust particles have become loaded with moisture, which condition favors rain, and justifies these proverbs:

"If the sun set in gray
The next will be a rainy day.

"If the sun goes pale to bed
'Twill rain tomorrow, it is said."

Other good examples of proverbs based on sky colors are these:

An evening gray and a morning red
Will send the shepherd wet to bed.

Evening red and morning gray
Two sure signs of one fine day.

Evening red and morning gray
Help the traveler on his way;
Evening gray and morning red
Bring down rain upon his head.

Many proverbs foretelling rain and bad weather are based on the appearance of solar and lunar halos and coronas, and as these form only when there is much moisture in the air and some condensation, but the proverbs of this class are well founded. Here are two examples:

When the sun is in his house, it will rain soon.
The bigger the ring, the nearer the wet.

MOON HAS SMALL EFFECT.

There are numerous proverbs based on the assumption that the moon appreciably controls the weather, but science has proved them to be without reliability. Beyond a very small tidal effect on the atmosphere, as indicated by the barometer, the moon has no effect whatever on the weather, say the scientists. The following proverb bears out the scientific theory:

The moon and the weather
May change together;
But change of the moon
Does not change the weather.
If we'd no moon at all,
And that may seem strange,
We still should have weather
That's subject to change.

However, as Dr. Humphreys observes, the appearance of the moon depends upon the conditions of the atmosphere, and, therefore, proverbs based upon phenomena of this nature are more or less sound and have much value. Thus:

Clear moon,
Frost soon.

Moonlight nights have the heaviest frosts.

Proverbs of this class are true, because on clearest nights the cooling of the earth's surface by radiation is greatest, and hence most likely to cause, through the low temperature reached, heavy dew or frost.

The interesting moon proverb—

Sharp horns do threaten windy weather,

is shown to have a scientific foundation. When the air is clear, bad seeing is due to atmospheric inequalities which the free mixing caused by winds will eliminate. Thus when the moon's horns appear sharp, that is, when the seeing is good, we know that these inequalities do not exist, and the natural inference is that they have been smoothed out by strong, overrunning winds, which later may reach the surface of the earth.

The Star proverb—

When the stars begin to huddle,
The earth will soon become a puddle, also has a scientific basis. In a mist the smaller stars are not visible, and the brighter ones shine dimly with a blur, each looking like a confused cluster of stars. This gave rise, prior to the ascertainments of science, that stars can huddle together at one time—before a rain—and be scattered asunder at another.

There are many proverbs based on the direction and changes of the wind, but their value mainly is local, except when taken in connection with the readings of the barometer.

The heighth, extent and shapes of the clouds depend upon the humidity and upon the temperature and motion of the atmosphere, and consequently they often furnish reliable warnings of the coming weather. One proverb correctly says:

The higher the clouds, the finer the weather.

High clouds are formed only at the expense of much cooling, and they contain little moisture. This proverb, however, it is pointed out, must be restricted to stratus and other of the more common clouds. It does not apply to those thin wispy or cirrus clouds, the highest of all, that float from 5 to 8 miles above sea level, for, as is well known:

Mackeral scales and mares' tails
Make lofty ships carry low sails.

Part of the air that forms the strong upward currents near the center of a storm rises to great heights, where, in middle latitudes, it gets into the swiftly eastward-moving layers that carry it and its ice particles far ahead of the rains. There are other ways by which such clouds can be formed, but that just explained is one of the most common, and as in this case they are only the overrunning portion of a storm that is coming on in the same general direction, the proverb just quoted evidently is well founded.

When the air is rather damp and the day is warm, great cumulus or thunderhead clouds are apt to form, as a result of strong convention, and produce frequent local showers. Hence the following proverb:

When clouds appear like rocks and towers,
The earth's refreshed by frequent showers.

When the air is full of moisture its temperature tends rapidly to become equalized, and the atmosphere is freed from the innumerable temperature irregularities that prevail during dry weather, and that strongly reflect and dissipate sound. But when the air is homogeneous, which is far more likely to be when damp, it will convey sound much better than when filled with inequalities, and hence there is good reason to accept the proverb—

Sound traveling far and wide
A stormy day will betide.

Not only the hearing, but the seeing also, is improved by the homogeneity of the atmosphere; and this, too, has appropriate proverbs, as for instance—

Decrease in atmospheric pressure and increase of humidity have led to many well founded proverbs. It is thus stated that the approach of a storm is marked by the rising of water in wells, by the more abundant flow of certain springs, by the bubbling of marshes, by bad odors of ditches, etc., all of which are due to that decrease of atmospheric pressure which precedes storms.

Increase of humidity, favorable to precipitation, is noted by the gathering of moisture of solid objects, the collection of perspiration on our own bodies owing to diminished evaporation, and dampness of many hygroscopic substances. This last effect is illustrated by the packing of salt, the tightening of cordage and of the strings of musical instruments, the dull and damp appearance of stone walls and columns, the wetting of smoke and similar phenomena, all of which have been made the subject of proverbs indicating a saturated storm.

Dr. Humphreys winds up his interesting discussion of weather proverbs by saying that he hopes enough of the more reliable ones have been quoted to indicate their importance in those cases where a weather service cannot take the place of weather signs, meaning the rural communities more or less remote from railroad and telegraph stations.

America Not Napping

(Special Cable to The Journal.)

LONDON.—Quite a sensation was caused in diplomatic circles recently when it became known that a big American firm had chartered twelve large British steamers to carry coal and other "goods" round to the Pacific coast. The general belief is that the dispute with Japan in regard to the anti-aliens bill, promoted by the California legislature, has something to do with this large order. The American government does not intend to be caught napping.

Ancient Pharmacopoea

LONDON.—Quaint medical remedies which were popular in bygone days were described at the city of London school by Dr. F. M. Sandwith, Gresham professor of physic, in a lecture on "Drugs, Old and New."

After pointing out that herbs supplied the first drugs, the lecturer described how animal products were accepted as medicine, some even remaining in the first English pharmacopoea published in 1618.

Tiger's flesh and new-born puppies were among the old remedies.

One book recommended a live spider to be rolled in butter and formed into a pill, and then swallowed, as an antidote for jaundice.

Vipers were held in high esteem, and a broth made from them was said to strengthen the sight. In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries powdered mummies were prescribed.

In some of the older herbal works a striking fact was the constant recommendation of remedies for bruises, which gave some idea of the manners of the day.

John Gerrard, who was chief gardener of Lord Burleigh's garden in the Strand, and had a garden of his own in Holborn (ten called a "suburb" of London), published a book in 1597, which recommended "Solomon's seal" for taking away in one night the blackness of bruises caused by falls "or woman's wilfulness in tumbling upon their hasty husbands' firsts or such like."

Crown Prince's Contempt

(Special Cable to The Journal.)

BERLIN, May 31.—The German crown prince—the man who will one day be kaiser—has declared, ahead of his time, for the sword. Such is the burden of the latest imperial literary production, "Germany in Arms," planned and edited by the Emperor William's heir and published broadcast. His imperial highness' memorable anti-British outburst in the German parliament a year back indicated to the world what manner of man he is; irresponsible, indiscreet, and anti-British besides. The book, "Germany in Arms," is not in itself a volume of diplomatic consequence, rather it is a volume for the nursery, with its score of colored plates, each portraying a different regiment or naval scene, and each explained by some expert. Thus the crown prince is responsible for a few words on the crack Garde du Corps, writing eloquently and significantly on the joys of a calvary charge. "How often in the midst of a charge have I caught the yearning cry of a comrade, 'Donnerwetter, If it were only in earnest.' That is the cavalry spirit. Every true soldier must feel and know it. 'Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori.'"

COLLEGE MEN WED SOON AFTER GRADUATION

President Judson, of University of Chicago, Testifies Before Vice Commission

(By Associated Press.)

CHICAGO, June 7.—Most college graduates enter business and soon thereafter are financially able to marry and most of the "sweet girl graduates wed. I am happy to say," testified Harry Pratt Judson, president of the University of Chicago, before the Illinois senate commission inquiring into the relation of low wages to vice today.

Volunteering that many of "our young men" work their way through college, Mr. Judson said school and college courses should be shortened so young men and women could be started on the serious business of life earlier.

Asked whether he thought the law should provide a minimum wage for minimum efficiency, Mr. Judson replied that the efficient man could earn more than the law could provide, that industrial training might be provided for the semi-efficient.

Men who are fitted for bank work are not the kind who would marry unless they could afford it, according to W. T. Abbott, vice president of the Central Trust company. He believed a man could marry on $1,000 a year. He thought establishment of a minimum wage in a bank would destroy efficiency.

A. W. Harris, another third witness and president of Northwestern university, said he believed it the duty of every community to see that the girl thrown on her own resources was able to live respectably.

Dr. Harris declared sons of rich men were not necessarily inefficient. Referring to sons of Chicago packers, he said he did not know one of them that was not the business equal or superior of his father.

Dr. Harris said E. H. Harriman's fortune of $100,000,000 "was not too much compensation for a rare individual who made entire railroad systems more efficient and indirectly worked to the welfare of hundreds of thousands of working men and women."

MANY COLLEGE STUDENTS TO WORK IN GOODYEAR FACTORY DURING VACATION

Many college men from all over the country are planning to work during the summer vacation in the factory of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber company, Akron, O. The company recently requested the college men in the company to write to their colleges asking for men, and the responses have been numerous.

"We like to have college men with us," says C. W. Seiberling, vice president of the company. "We like their spirit and enthusiasm, and I firmly believe that the spirit of loyalty which is a distinctive feature of the Goodyear concern, emanates largely from having so many clear cut young fellows around. The broad viewpoint and training these men receive, has helped wonderfully in fostering friendly relations with our customers. Our ideal of truth, which we instill in the minds of our young men, and fair and square dealing, I believe, have done more than any one thing, in building up our good will."

Railway Accidents

(Special Cable to The Journal.)

LONDON.—Figures supplied to the board of trade show that during 1912 1,011 people were killed and 8,700 injured in the course of public traffic on the railways of the United Kingdom. In the previous year the corresponding figures were 1,070 and 8,345.

In addition, 10 passengers, 60 servants and 37 other persons were killed, and 697 passengers, 2,624 servants, and 585 other persons were injured on the premises of railway companies as the result of accidents in which the movement of railway vehicles was not concerned.

Two passengers lost their lives through collisions and 18 by derailments. Of the passengers injured, 324 cases were due to collisions, 211 to derailments, 25 to trains running into stations at too high a speed, and 6 to fires in trains.

Of the remaining passengers included in the table, 31 were killed and 46 injured by falling from trains in motion, 17 were killed and 170 injured through falling between trains and platforms, and 8 were killed and 866 injured by falling on the platform or the track when entering or alighting from trains.

As many as 718 passengers were injured by the closing of carriage doors.

Address and awarding of prizes, by Mrs. Henry H. Tucker, chairman of educational committee.

The faculty and the student body declare that the successful year just closed is, in a large measure, due to the loyal co-operation of Mrs. Tucker. For the past two or three years she has made personal contributions of ten dollars in gold to deserving pupils, five dollars in gold as first prize to the pupil making the most nearly perfect attendance and deportment, prizes each of two and a half dollars in gold for second and third prizes.

Luther Stephens, of the fifth grade, this year received first prize; Dave Carr, of the second grade, second prize, and James Stephens, of the fourth grade, third prize. Mrs. Ephie Williams, head teacher, also gave five dollars in gold for awards to members of her class. Lula Stephens, Marie St. John, Neal Wallace, Paul Weaver, James Stephens were recipients of one dollar each in gold.

Mrs. Tucker's address to the faculty, pupils and parents was forceful and condensed; it was the embodiment of all that calls for a quickening in education and life.

Her specific appeal to pupils was for better attendance, more interest in public school matters, and co-operation with teachers. As chairman of the esley house educational committee, she and her committee have responded faithfully to all the needs and calls of the night school for supplies and books; in fact, everything else for the betterment of conditions at the school.

The superintendent of the public schools has furnished some of the best teaching force of his system to the settlement school, which is one of the public schools.

There Was NoDemand for Stocks And Traders Sold the Market Off

There Was None of the Previous Heavy Liquidation or Nervousness—Traders Sold on Lack of Demand

(By Associated Press.)

NEW YORK, June 7.—Speculators who took the view that the rise of prices yesterday, coupled with the spirited buying, indicated that a turning point had been reached after the long decline, were disappointed by today's market. Trading was listless, and there was no demand for stocks, such as might indicate in itself renewed confidence in the outlook for the market. Compared with the earlier days of the week, however, the market made a favorable showing. There was none of the previous heavy liquidation or nervousness. Such pressure as was directed at the list seemed to come chiefly from traders who were inclined to sell by the fact that there was little demand for stocks.

For a time after the opening some of the important stocks ranged slightly above yesterday's close. The movement was narrow and irregular and finally became definitely downward. The decline was influenced by the weakness of Can, which sold off 3 points to 73½, a new low figure. Weakness of this stock was associated with a report that the federal government would institute proceedings against the company, but the report lacked confirmation, and apparently was of the same character as similar rumors affecting other corporations which have appeared from time to time in the financial district during the week. The bank statement failed to disclose the cash gain of $4,000,000 to $5,000,000, indicated by the known movement of currency, the actual gain amounting to only $400,000. The heavy liquidation of stocks during the week was reflected in a seal ing down in loans of nearly $17,000,000.

The bond market was irregular. Total sales, par value, $1,112,000.

United States 3s and Panama 3s advanced ½ on call on the week.

FINANCIAL BUREAU ON STOCKS.

NEW YORK, June 7.—Financial Bureau says: The general market in London shows a better tone with a hardening tendency. Wilson rebukes McReynolds for publicity given to the Tobacco tax plan, which was discussed merely as a suggestion. Twenty New York brokers are subpoenaed by the federal grand jury in the cotton corner probe. Information channels are more friendly to the market. Further improving tendencies with short covering and evidences of accumulation of the standard stocks may be seen today. Washington advices indicate a decision in the Minnesota rate case next week. We would look for buying opportunities in the standard stocks. Cotton regarded as a purchase on recessions.

INTERESTING NEWS AND GOSSIP OF THE MARKETS

Weather Reports, Crop Advices, Expert Opinions and Newspaper Comment

COTTON GOSSIP

Times-Democrat says: The bear has a mighty weak and unsettled hanging a tale. The weather is favorable, prospects for spring plantings are excellent. The acreage is probably larger. Anticipating the exploitation of these factors, the constitutional bear sold early and often, and advised all his friends to do the same. These factors have been exploited in a world-wide way for days, and yesterday Secretary Hester's bearish week-end statistics were published as given general publicity, but all to no market. The market simply refused to exhibit weakness of any characteristic. As a matter of fact, selling by longs on reported rains in Texas alone seemed to have checked an upward tendency. It is quite true that the off-take by American mills is disappointing and that those who predicted America's absorption by mills to reach six million bales for the season. But the trade attention is being concentrated on the March and spot sales of 15,000 bales at Liverpool yesterday suggests a larger off-take abroad than has been anticipated.

Spinners' takings now aggregate 1,255,000 bales less than last year, when the season's total was 15,585,000, and 779,000 bales more than in 1908-1909, when the season's total was 15,245,000. From these comparisons some of the latent figure that the season's total will be less than 14,250,000. The crest of the visible supply was in March at 3,700,000 and date the visible supply of American grown cotton was 745,000 bales less than last year, while yesterday last year's visible was 1,000,000. The 340,000 less than last year. The visible supply of all kinds of cotton is now 94,000 more than last year, wherein we see that it was 411,000 less than last year.

Map shows fair over central belt, partly cloudy in southeast. Fine rains northwest Texas, Oklahoma, Tennessee, scattered showers eastern half of the belt. Indications are for more rain over Sunday coming on western and central belt.

Map complete, shows good indications for general rains over Texas and all of central states over Sunday, also cooler with entire belt, eastern states will get scattered showers.

Dallas, Texas: Texas raining in Panhandle, other portions of state generally fair. Rains in Oklahoma heavy rains over entire state.

According to Galveston Commercial Agent, J. Buston, of Liverpool, is supposed to control the bulk of the cotton sold there in New York, the theory of same being that he has been marking up or down in order to sell his holdings of spot cotton here to the best advantage.

The New York cotton exchange will be closed Saturday, July 5.

Cotton and cottonseed oil buying July and August supposedly for spot interests. The selling was scattered, some quite heavy as shown in Oklahoma which brought out some selling, but market is very steady on strength of summer months and buying of same by spot interests.

The summer positions are absolutely controlling the market and the spot situation of probable heavy shipments out of this stock is causing considerable uneasiness among bears. Brokers representing the larger spot interests were the leading buyers of July. July prices are thought to be for spot interest. The selling of July reported as scattered.

There was scarcely any feature to the market today. Local support led by Walsh and early but covered near the close when July rallied to 12.35 on covering by July shorts. Bloodworth sold July and bought December. There was the usual amount of weak covering by both locally and from the south. The market at present is dominated by the summer months, but around 20 for October and December, there was plenty for sale.

STOCK GOSSIP

Dow-Jones summary: President Wilson not backing new tobacco plan. Interstate commerce commission hopeful over rate case decision shortly. Reports show that in many sections trade is better than this time last year.

Union Pacific dissolution does not call for all its southern Pacific stock. There is talk that bankers unite to prevent further forced liquidation. Low prices attract buying by bankers. Twelve industrials advanced .14. Twenty active interests advanced .87.

Bears are complaining of shorts by the bears might carry the advance little further today. The bears are predicting a sharp break on an increase in reserve. There is some talk of a reduction in the reserve requirements. Would only buy stocks on weak spots for long pull.—Boyd.

Dividend on Goldfield Consolidated was passed yesterday.

GRAIN GOSSIP

Chicago Inter Ocean says: It was the belief among bulls that there has been enough damage in the southwest to make the maximum of the present level of prices and with any material change for the speculative trade a higher level is expected. Sentiment in corn is bullish. There are a good many bears, but there is a feeling among conservative traders that it is best for the bulls to wait for a little time being, as much of the bulge in the last few days has been largely regarded as seasonal. It is not expected that there is to be great pressure of receipts to keep prices down.

Bartlett, Frazier & Carrington say: We are inclined to look for a narrow market until after the government crop report June 10, unless something sensational in the way of crop news is developed.

Corn: Speculative interest has assumed rather small proportions and the market is a waiting one. Prices are good enough to attract sales during the next few days will be the chief factor. Cash demand is good.

Oats: Crop reports from the southwest are not favorable to the bulls. The market is a narrow one.

Bartlett, Frazier & Carrington: Reports of general rains in Oklahoma, big help for corn.

J. W. Snow wires from Russell, Kans.: In Kansas, north of the main line of Union Pacific rains came soon enough to save large part of crop. Today 1 to 2 inches fell in Ellis and Osborne counties most fields show burned spots, very well advanced and some large areas that will make 20 bushels or more. Present rains in southern counties will allow still more good yield in north three tiers of counties.

BRADSTREET'S REVIEW

Bradstreet's review says:

Varying factors are presented by this week's report of trade. Rains, crop flips and talk of lower tariff changes, being in sharp contrast to very favorable advices as to the actual industrial trade and as to crops. Better weather has improved distribution at retail, particularly over a wide area of the country have enjoyed a good season of trade and for prompt delivery and crop movement is almost uniformly favorable.

But the financial situation continues to hold up operations for the time being. Wheat, the trends of the week have been rather more concentrating than otherwise, and over the country where textiles have been working under a pull, lines are exhibiting a moderate scale, and in the principal western centers the movement of dry goods by jobbers have been of record proportions—that is, for the season.

Stocks of various kinds were entirely exhausted and the sole question is one of ability to fill orders promptly. However, trade currents are flowing in their usual time pace in the northwest, southwest and west than they do in the east or southeast. Still, southern reports augur better future developments, while the situation as to growing cotton being manifestly more favorable than a year ago, when the crop was at this time last year.

Wheat, including flour exports from the United States and Canada for the week ending June 5 are 3,781,000 bushels, a dozen years, aggregating 7,561,329 bushels, against 6,000,000 bushels last week and 5,908,693 bushels, this week last year.

Business failures for the week ending June 5 were 276, which compares with 297 in the the week of 1912.

Business failures in Canada for the week terminating with Thursday, number 41, which compares with 39 in the corresponding week of 1912.

WEEKLY STOCK REVIEW.

(By Associated Press.)

NEW YORK, June 7.—Heavy liquidation upset the securities market this week, and quotations at times declined with violence. The average price for active stocks reached the lowest level of several years, and the market was nervous and unsettled much of this time. There was some improvement toward the close of the week.

Conditions here were largely a reflection of unsettlement abroad. Liquidation here for London account was a factor. Disappointment was expressed at the latest dissolution plans of the Harriman roads.

The government weather reports of the week, stating that there was a serious deficiency of rain in certain sections, caused some uneasiness as to the outlook for crops. Reports from Washington regarding the suppositions of the attorney general to proceed against certain large corporations, were associated with the marked weakness of various stocks.

Bonds also were weak and some of the less favored issues registered exceptional declines. There was some calling of loans but the effect on money rates was negligible, although it was the opinion of bankers that stiffening of rates before the end of the month was not unlikely. Foreign exchange rose steadily, influenced largely by the heavy selling of stocks here by European bankers.

SURPLUS RESERVE ITEM SHOWS LARGE INCREASE

Surplus Now Is $29,988,000, Which Reflects Comfortable Position for Banks

(By Associated Press.)

NEW YORK, June 7.—The Financier says this week:

The statement of the Associated banks of New York for the week ending June 7 reflected in part the heavy liquidation of the week, loans having shown a decrease in the report based on actual operations of $10,912,000. There was a corresponding decrease of $11,032,000 in deposits, and the only feature of the statement that did not seem in accordance with known facts regarding the movement of money was the very small increase of $403,000 in cash. The preliminary estimates made the gain a trifle over $4,000,000. At the highest the trading months were 14 to 26 points over last week's close, at the lowest they were 6 to 10 points under.

Weather and crop news this week were decidedly favorable but the operations of the bulls in July effected a partially covering movement of prices. The rumors that much cotton would be accepted on July contracts caused some nervousness and much covering among shorts and restricted short selling of the new crop months.

At the end of the month it was claimed that the crop had made decided improvement under the past week's favorable temperatures and scattered rains and that the condition had gained decidedly over that of a year ago. It was shown that they would be accepted on July contracts caused some nervousness and much covering among shorts and restricted short selling of the new crop months.

At the end of the month it was claimed that the crop had made decided improvement under the past week's favorable temperatures and scattered rains and that the condition had gained decidedly over that of a year ago. It was shown that they were $29,988,400 over the legal requirements. This is an increase of $2,770,900 from last week.

The statement follows:

EDITOR OF "STATIST" SEES BETTER MARKET

Sir George Paish Asserts American Investor Has Lost His Nerve

London cable to the New York Sun says:

Sir George Paish, editor of the Statist and an eminent authority on financial matters, speaking of the business situation, said that while on the surface appearances were dark the present condition of the market was the fact that the public had lost its nerve and had lost its nerve. In an interview with the Sun correspondent Sir George continued:

"Fundamentally London is very sound, probably sounder or quite as sound as New York. It is true that trade is not quite as good as that in recent months have been on a great scale and that there will be some shrinkage, but even this shrinkage will be digested. This is likely to occur soon as business houses are giving no encouragement to fresh borrowings at the present. By autumn the whole of the stock which has been accumulated by London will be found a permanent home in country investment boxes.

"The first five months of 1913," continued Sir George, "the new issues put out in London amounted to nearly £250,000,000, against £270,000,000 in the corresponding period of 1912 and £190,000,000 in the same period of 1911. The amount of new securities which the British Isles can absorb every year is about $1,000,000,000. In fact, in 1912 it was $1,000,000,000, in 1911 $900,000,000 and in 1910 $1,160,000,000. It is probable that by autumn the stock which has accumulated will have been digested by investors and London will be again prepared for large fresh issues.

"The cause of the existing situation," and the editor of the Statist "lies in the United States and the conditions of Europe. In recent years, America, France and Germany subscribed very large amounts for new enterprises, but in each way the Balkan States these countries appear to have lost their nerve. At any rate they have ceased to invest the normal amount of capital for new enterprises. This result has been largely brought about by the resort to the London market to satisfy their needs to a much greater extent than usual. Fortunately London has retained its reputation for enterprise and willingness to lend even in periods of stress, and large sums by London have to some extent prevented the monetary disturbance throughout the world from becoming more severe than it has been.

"Difficult the stringency of the capital market and the heavy withdrawals of funding has resulted are entirely due first to the Balkan war, which naturally alarmed continental investors and made them wish to keep their resources liquid, secondly, to the caution of American investors who for international as well as national reasons have not been disposed to invest as freely as usual.

"Whether or not the money stringency will become more acute depends largely upon whether or not French, German and American investors become more free to buy and sell, owing to provide the normal amount of new capital. If a feeling of confidence as to responsible persons shall assist in the work of restoring confidence and thus enable the world to obtain what is essential for its progress.

"European statesmen are now alive to the necessity of doing their best to avoid putting forth every effort to bring about a satisfactory settlement of outstanding questions connected with the Balkans. In time of war, history has the international political situation in its keeping, and it is probable that it will be, as anticipated, Servia and Bulgaria come to terms. Then the influence of the great powers, the reason for financial politics will cease and the use of international politics will entirely disappear.

"The distrust concerning American securities arises in the main from the fear of the action of the interstate commerce commission to permit the railroads to increase their freight rates in order to meet the higher wage rate of their employes. If the commission should accede to a fresh request from the railroads for permission to raise their freight rates this cause of distrust would disappear.

"The appointment of a receiver for the Frisco system has also had an unfavorable effect upon reception on this side, and it is desirable that every step possible be taken to restore confidence in American securities. The Balkan troubles are speedily and finally settled, and if efforts are made by the United States to restore the confidence of investors in their own securities, I am confident

Good Rains in the Winter Belt Caused Heavy Selling of Wheat

Holders Showed an Increasing Desire to Convert Profits Into Cash Before the Government Report Monday

(By Associated Press.)

CHICAGO, June 7.—Holders of wheat showed an increasing desire today to convert profits into cash before the government crop report Monday. Unchecked fields in southwestern Kansas where absence of rain has been worst, aroused selling early. The spell broke, though not at the close, was 3¼ to 3⅜ under last night. At times prices of corn, oats off just as much and provisions ranging from 10c decline to an advance of 2c figured.

Besides good rains in Kansas and elsewhere in the winter crop belt, bearish news on wheat was abroad in the number of cars arrival at Liverpool and a notable gain in the English visible supply. Domestic primary receipts were more than double those of last year, being 1,000,000 bushels against 235,000 last year. At the same time, export clearances of wheat and flour were light, equaling only 400,000 bushels.

Warmer weather in the spring crop territory had a tendency to prevent any liquidation of wheat. In this connection, a good deal of interest was aroused through assertions that July deliveries at Minneapolis would be on a large scale, much of the 18,000,000 bushels on hand now said to be too moist, and otherwise unsuitable to carry in elevators through the summer.

In the corn crowd, new buyers were few and former ones more disposed to sell than to buy. Final consignments were piling up and sales to be cast scarcely noticed in monthly.

The oats market flattened out under big receipts in all directions.

Rock Island owner signs that one of the big packers had control of July deliveries. Commission houses were selling lard and ribs easy.

What Barristers Earn

London—Who will be the new Judge?

There is much interesting speculation in legal circles as to who will be the occupant of the new seat on the Judge's bench in the king's bench division of the high court of justice.

The recommendation of the commission, which has been inquiring into the organization of public business on the common law side—that an additional Judge should be appointed—is quite expected to be carried into effect very shortly.

DUN'S REPORT OF FAILURES IN MAY

Although there were fewer commercial failures reported to R. G. Dun & Co. during May than in every other month this year, with the single exception of March, and while the total liabilities were the smallest for any month so far, in both respects the record shows some increase as compared with the same period of 1912. Thus, there were 1,246 business reverses in the United States during the month of May, against 1,204 similar defaults in May a year ago, when the amount involved was $15,277,462. Hence, it appears that forty-two more concerns suspended in May this year than in the corresponding month of 1912, while the total indebtedness was larger by, roughly, $1,600,000. Carrying the comparison further back, it is seen that last month's commercial death rate was higher, numerically, than in any May since 1906—when there were 1,379 failures—and that the liabilities were the heaviest on record in the decade just closed. In 1911 showed 1,096 suspensions for $13,460,-847, and in 1910 there were 1,071 defaults in amount only $9,590,186, and in 1909 1,028 concerns failed, owing $14,380,760.

principal feature of the insolvency record shows that of the 1,246 business reverses last month, there were for $100,000, or more, aggregating in all $7,610,833, against twenty-five similar suspensions in 1911 for $5,279,061. This left the exceptionally large number of 1,221 failures, etyping in amount, for sums covered by the 1,359 insolvencies for less than $100,000 in May, 1912, number, total indebtedness and smaller defau'ts was $9,252,911, as compared with $8,971,436 in 1912, $7,191,712 in 1909 and $9,502,754 in 1908. The average liabilities of each failure in May this year were $7,633, which, while not much above the $7,099 reported in the corresponding month of 1912 and 1910 and 1898, when the amounts were $8,164 and $8,319, respectively in May, 1907, number, total indebtedness of the manufacturing division during May were the largest in any month since 1908, while the total of money involved was the heaviest on record for that month, owing to two large defaults of manufacturing concerns with 313 manufacturing reverses for $7,389,778, as against 295 last year for $5,275,359, and 345 in 1911, 218 for only $5,077,250 in 1910. In 1911 in 1909 there were 345 in 1908, 291 in the liabilities were $6,088,988. Of the total manufacturing indebtedness, $4,800,000, or nearly four-fifths of twenty-two defaults for $100,000, or more—an increase in both respects compared with the corresponding month of time the five prices received were unsatisfactory from the breeders' standpoint. For these reasons, cattle raising went into the discard, and the present grently restricted supply is the result.

"The time has come when we must conserve our meat supply and feed it to our people. It and at the present remunerative prices for food animals it is probable this will be gradually accomplished. Farmers generally, especially those in the corn belt, should take advantage of the situation and increase their feeding under the present favorable conditions. The south has great possibilities for the future as a cattle raising country.

"With our diminished production in the face of their heavy demand we find that the meat income market we no longer have a surplus for export. This is one reason why under that export trade in meat animals and products has declined heavily. Our once great trade with England and other parts of Europe has practically ended and the only considerable items now shipped to foreign countries are canned meats, principally such as bacon, ham and lard.

"England is now drawing upon its imported beef supply mostly from Argentine and its supply of mutton and lamb from Australia and New Zealand as well as Argentine. The chief reason Americans are sheep rather than cattle countries and export cattle rather than sheep is because much mutton and lamb (by weight) as beef. The number of cattle in Argentina showed a decrease of 1,000,000 during 1911, as compared with the preceding one (1908.)

WEEKLY REVIEW OF DRY GOODS MARKET

(By Associated Press.)

NEW YORK, June 7.—Sellers of cotton declare business this week is satisfactory as to the trading basis to induce Jobbers to place forward orders for fall delivery. The price of print cloths been reduced to 13 cents, a drop of ¾ cents a yard, and bleached muslins to 7½ cents, a drop of ½c a yard, since the end of last month. Orders been placed in sufficient quantities to care for the mill output and stocks in the hands of the days and the markets are turning steadier.

Fall River reports 70,000 pieces of fancy print cloths, 70,000 of which were for contract delivery. The statement of the production of the country will hold cleaning up sales during the coming week and an active trade is expected to be looked for. Restricted production and limited stocks in hand have brought about an unusual merchandising situation and it is generally felt that when the tariff legislation is completed there will be a broad trade to fill up depleted shelves.

Prints are being held steady. There has been a considerable diversion of loans from dress ginghams to other yarn dyed products such as cashmeres, bleached cottons, and chambrays but the tone of the dress gingham trade is healthier. Such is reported somewhat unsettled and quiet. Trade for forward delivery of fancy cottons is restricted by application of the tariff changes. Reports from various sections indicate a maintenance of normal consumption.

Prices rule as follows: Print cloths 29-inch 64x64's, 5¾ cents; 64x60's, 5¼ cents; 56x60's, 4¾ cents; 3 ¼ cents; 38½ inch, brown sheetings, southern standards, 7⅝@8 cents; denims, 9-ounce, 14 cents; ticks, 9 cents; staple ginghams, 5½ cents; standard prints, 5½ cents; staple ginghams, 6¾ cents; dress ginghams, 9 cents.

WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE IRON AND STEEL MARKET

(By Associated Press.)

NEW YORK, June 7.—Some slight improvement was reported last week in new orders booked by leading steel producers, but shipments on contracts were still about 19 per cent in excess of new business booked. Orders booked by subsidiaries of the Steel Corporation are estimated at approximately 35,000 tons per day or about 15 per cent less than shipments.

Some of the smaller mills were more aggressive in bidding for wanted tonnage and in prices of sheets, bars and plates, as well as in fabricated shapes and fine material, the other hand, prices of boiler tubes, oil country goods and water-well casing were advanced $1 a ton, and wrought pipe $2 a ton. Wrought products were maintained by the largest interests, but independents were making concessions to shade the base prices, $1 per ton. More sales of sheet bars and tin bars were made at $27.50 mill. Railroad equipment orders are light, including only 15,000 tons of rails, mainly for export; 1,000 cars for the International Great Northern and six locomotives for industrial lines.

Steel building and bridge orders were small, calling for only 10,000 tons of shapes. Structural contracts pending total 30,000 tons.

One feature of interest was the revival in marine work, prospective business calling for about 40,000 tons of steel plates in the east, including material for the construction of six steamships for the Hamburg-American and three for the Mallory Line.

The demand for pig iron brought out larger inquiries and resulted in sales of 50,000 tons in the southern field alone. Contracts are pending for 50,000 tons more. Merchant furnaces are going out in some for repairs—but output is still securing 91,000 tons daily, while furnace stocks are accumulating.

BEEF PRODUCTION OF U. S. DECREASES 30 PER CENT

Government Utters Warning Against High Price Menace, Imports Exceed Exports.

WASHINGTON, June 7.—A bulletin issued by the department of agriculture forecasts an era of steadily increasing prices for beef unless the American people learn to conserve the present supply and provide for the future.

The most striking feature of the report is the statement that in the last six years there has been a decrease of 20 per cent in the number of beef cattle. A decrease of 12 per cent in sheep in the number of cattle slaughtered under the supervision of United States inspectors during the first three months of this year as compared with the same period last year.

The bulletin says that in the year 1912 for the firts time in the history of the United States, imports of animal products exceeded the exports.

Sheep and lambs were also on the upgrade during the last year, advancing from 10 to 20 per cent.

"The year 1912 was a year of high prices for cattle and for all kinds of meat," the report.

"Unfortunately when prices of live stock rule high, as they do now, it is there is a natural tendency for farmers to rush everything saleable to market, including immature animals and, worst of all, breeding animals. This inevitably brings about a future shortage. During the last year increased importation of cattle in 1912, the number being 1,035,711 as against 615,846 in 1911. The animal products in 1912 were valued at $185,-404,196. This is the smallest total since the decade to establish a larger per capita consequent to the Civil war.

The United States no longer has the former abundant supplies of cattle raised cheaply on the open range. The range is being cut into and fenced off into farms or diverted to cheap grazing. There has been also a great increase in the price of cattle and it is now possible to make cattle feeding a risky and expensive industry, especially for those who, especially by those in the corn belt, should take advantage of the situation and increase their feeding under the present favorable conditions. The south has great possibilities for the future as a cattle raising country.

"With our diminished production in the face of their heavy demand we find that the meat income market we no longer have a surplus for export trade in meat animals and products has declined heavily. Our once great trade with England and other parts of Europe has practically ended and the only considerable items now shipped to foreign countries are canned meats, principally such as bacon, ham and lard.

"England is now drawing upon its imported beef supply mostly from Argentine and its supply of mutton and lamb from Australia and New Zealand as well as Argentine. The chief reason Americans are sheep rather than cattle countries and export cattle rather than sheep is because much mutton and lamb (by weight) as beef. The number of cattle in Argentina showed a decrease of 1,000,000 during 1911, as compared with the preceding one (1908.)

HAYWARD & CLARK COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, La., June 6.—Oklahoma and the northwestern portion of Texas, had a general rainfall over night, and the eastern belt reported showers occurred in north Texas and Tennessee, but elsewhere the weather was favorable in the eastern half of the belt.

Indications are for more general rains over Sunday in the central and western states. Scattered showers in the eastern states. Cooler over the entire belt, with Liverpool furnishing no incentive to action, we had a quiet Saturday market, looking for a good deal of rain to fall to bring in the way of professional action. New York reflects the market state plainly that the professional operations in the July position rule the market to the exclusion of all other considerations. Brokers representing Liverpool spot interests have also been steady buyers of July during the past three days. The small stock in New York only 40,000 bales certificated, said to be the smallest in ten years, is the basis on encouragement to bullish operations. As far as new crops are concerned they are under the sympathetic influence of efforts to advance July futures.

For the time being it must be admitted that, owing to the greatly reduced stocks, the July position appears to be the key for bullish designs, and the flash of success could easily lead to excessive covering. Evidence of consideration is that July in New York is nearly 12 cents and that everybody is seeking sales and every private information visible and invisible holdings in the south are a good deal larger than last year, and output is to be correspondingly less. A realization of good crop prospects and the continued absence of mill demands, these factors could become attracted by any future position of isolated things. The professionals here in New York towards the close today was taken as an indication of the sentiment and intentions for next week.

The New Earl's Court.

(Special Cable to The Journal.)

LONDON—A warlike scene during the South African campaign, with an entrenched camp, a fully equipped field hospital, and a realistic railway train will be among the features of the forthcoming exhibition at Earl's Court.

All sorts of guns and equipment have been lent by the war office, and specimens of ordnance dating from the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries have been lent from the Rotunda museum, Woolwich.

In the Empress hall there will be a realistic picture of a modern naval engagement, with attendant hydroplanes, aeroplanes, and airships, and something novel in the shape of wireless control will be attempted.

The working models of the battleships engaged will be constructed by boys, each requiring a couple of men to manage.

For the hospital train a special railway siding has had to be laid down, and thirty-five men under an expert royal engineer foreman are engaged in preparing the entrenched camp.

It will be quite a new Earl's Court, and visitors will hardly recognize it.

WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE NAVAL STORES MARKET

SAVANNAH, Ga., June 7.—The rosin market in Savannah which has been stagnant for several weeks broke out into feverish activity on yesterday afternoon and at the 4 o'clock call 60 casks were sold, more than the entire output of rosins at very heavy declines. The factors have been holding up their supplies were compelled to sell to finish up the business and most dropped out of the market. The spirits market for the week has been steady and has been steady declines during the week until Monday morning, when the prices were opened firm at 35¼c. This resulted in large sales, but it is to be conceded however, that there is no money in making spirits at that price. The receipts at this port of both spirits and rosins for the past week have been light and make them even heavier than at this time. There is no immediate prospect of an increase in prices of either spirits or rosins.

Lord Morley in Berlin

BERLIN.—Why has Lord Morley come to Berlin? In official quarters it is denied that a political mission of any kind is responsible for his presence in the German capital, but, on the other hand, the newspapers decline to believe that he would select Berlin as the place to spend a prolonged holiday at this juncture (this year). A feature of his visit, it is said, will be a visit to the famous magnitude ever engaging his attention.

The lord president of the council is undergoing the same experience at the hands of the newspapers of the British Island as Lord Haldane underwent a year and a half ago.

The British secretary of state for war was in the capacity of Great Britain's peace messenger, but he described his visit as purely social. Lord Morley is now reported as having used a similar expression when questioned by journalists, but the newspapers point out that the lord president's visit is peculiarly timely, inasmuch as Prince Lichnowsky, the German ambassador, is also present in Berlin.

The Reichpost believes that the visit is connected with the "second phase of development in the near east, the advent of which would be welcome, but which will entail the division of Asia Minor, followed by a change in the balance of power in the Mediterranean.

SHAKE-UP EXPECTED AMONG OFFICERS OF S. CAROLINA ASYLUM

Predicted Now That Board of Regents Will Ask Governor to Remove Superintendent Babcock

GENERAL CHANGE IN STAFF NOW PREDICTED

Board of Regents Meets July 1, to Fill Positions on Staff for Terms of Two Years

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

COLUMBIA, S. C., June 7.—A general shake-up in the personnel of the staff of employes at the state hospital for the insane, is the prediction when the board of regents meets here at noon on July 1 to fill the positions for a term of two years.

Many changes will be made is not at all improbable. A resolution asking for the resignation of the entire staff is said to have been passed by the board at its meeting here this week.

That a resolution asking the governor to remove Dr. J. W. Babcock will be offered at the meeting of the board on this occasion was predicted today. The constitution gives the governor the right to appoint the superintendent of the asylum and the board of regents by and with the advice and consent of the senate. All of the other employes are elected by the boards.

It is said that the board at a meeting several months ago passed a resolution that the term of office of the staff of employes at the asylum should be two years and that the office of the present staff should terminate on July 1, 1913.

Interest centers in the fight which is said to be brewing against Dr. Babcock as superintendent. He has held this position ever since in the early '90s, when he was appointed by the Governor B. R. Tillman to succeed Dr. Griffin.

It will be recalled that the last meeting of the general assembly Governor Blease one night sprang a sensation by sending in the name of Dr. W. Gustave Housel, of Newberry, to be superintendent of the asylum to the senate and that after a heated and prolonged discussion of the matter behind closed doors the nomination was rejected.

VIVIAN STANLEY TO GET POSTOFFICE IN DUBLIN

Charge of "Vicious" Opposition to Mr. Wilson Not Sustained Upon Inquiry

BY RALPH SMITH.

WASHINGTON, June 7.—While there has been no official announcement by the postoffice department, it is believed tonight that Vivian Stanley will be nominated for postmaster at Dublin on the recommendation of Congressman Dudley M. Hughes. It is understood that the charges of "vicious and offensive" opposition by Stanley to the nomination of President Wilson at Baltimore have not been established, and that the department is inclined to respect the wishes of Mr. Hughes.

When Stanley's name was first presented for the Dublin postoffice, it was charged that he had been equally as active and bitter in his fight on the president as was Albert S. Hardy, at Gainesville, whose activity cost him that office. The department declined to nominate him, pending a full investigation of the charges.

Ed T. Brown, Walter P. Andrews and William J. Harris, state chairman, who were the Wilson leaders in Georgia, are understood to have recommended the nomination of Stanley, after making a full investigation. It is stated that they have examined the files of his paper, the Dublin Courier-Dispatch, with care and have found nothing offensive.

Target Practice

(By Associated Press.)

WASHINGTON, June 7.—The individual ratings of the war vessels in practice were made public today by the navy department. The cruiser Maryland with a merit percentage of 80.522, attained first place among the vessels, according to Lieutenant Commander T. T. Craven, director of target practice and engineering competitions.

The Minnesota finished nineteenth and last with a standing of 32.71.

The four vessels next to the Maryland and their standing were: Rhode Island 77.974; Idaho 76.562; Virginia 71.952; New Hampshire 64.074.

"The scores this spring are materially higher than those of last year in practically all forms of target practice," said Commander Craven. "This improvement is due to the establishment of schedules for progressive training, permitting better preparation for the exercises. The performance of the older ships has been particularly gratifying."

Detective Convicted

(By Associated Press.)

SAN FRANCISCO, June 7.—The state obtained the first conviction in its prosecution of members of the San Francisco police force for alleged complicity in the operations of the notorious "forty thieves" bunco gang when Frank Esola, a former detective, was found guilty last night.

Esola was indicted on the specific charge of having connived with Michael Gallo, now a convict, in robbing a farmer of $900. With seven other policemen, the remainder of whom are awaiting trial on conspiracy charges, he was accused by four confessed bunco men with complicity in swindling operations said to have yielded the bunco ring more than $300,000 since 1908 from which time, the confidence men declared, they had worked under police protection.

GOV. BLEASE REFUSES TO CHANGE CAMPING ORDERS

Remains Firm Despite Appeal of Adjutant General to Change Plans

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

COLUMBIA, S. C., June 7.—Adjutant General Moore asked the governor to reconsider his determination to have one regiment of militia encamp at Anderson, another at Aiken and the third to encamp on the state rifle range at Columbia if they wish, and to order all regiments to encamp on the state camp site. The adjutant general said the site was perfectly sanitary, and submitted statements backing this up from the medical department.

BELL IS SILENT UNTIL MRS. HAM IS NAMED

BY RALPH SMITH.

WASHINGTON, June 7.—Pending the confirmation of Mrs. H. W. J. Ham as postmaster at Gainesville, vice Mrs. H. D. Longstreet, Congressman Bell has decided to withhold the publication of any statement relating to the rejection of his own recommendation.

It will be recalled that Mr. Bell urged the appointment of A. S. Hardy, editor of a Gainesville paper, but that the department declined to name Hardy and nominated Mrs. Ham instead.

EATONTON, Ga., June 7.—Little Martha Ida Hearn, the six-year-old daughter and only child of Dr. and Mrs. W. Dodge Hearn, formerly of Atlanta, while at play stepped upon and broke off in her foot a sewing needle, about three-fourth of the needle remaining in the foot. An effort was made by the parents of the child to extract the broken point, without success after cutting into the foot. A physician was summoned, who also worked without avail. An operation with ether has been decided upon for relief.

ANNOUNCEMENT COMING LATER

WATCH FOR IT

AT AUCTION

WAIT FOR IT AND INCREASE YOUR BANK ACCOUNT

Another opportunity is to be offered Atlanta home lovers to share in the pleasure and prosperity of the city's most beautiful residence section—Ansley Park.

Twenty-five exceptionally desirable building lots have been opened in Ansley Park Annex. This subdivision has been prepared in the same thorough manner that has been characteristic of all the developments in Ansley Park.

Facing North Boulevard and overlooking the golf links, Ansley Park Annex offers the most attractive panorama of scenic beauty to be found in any section. A home here will place you in close proximity to an atmosphere of quiet comfort and center you in the very heart of suburban luxury.

No other section in the city of Atlanta has ever equaled the popularity of Ansley Park, and the Annex will surely attract the same discriminating class as the Park has heretofore.

And aside from the satisfaction that comes from owning a home in this beautiful tract, there will be not one of the purchasers but who can, if he desires, realize a vast amount of profit upon his investment within a few years.

You already know the story of Ansley Park. You know we foretold years ago the great future of this section. How true has been our prediction is now known to every thinking person in this territory. Today, we tell you that Ansley Park Annex Lots will increase in the same proportion of value as did those in Ansley Park proper.

Nothing will ever stop the steady growth of Ansley Park, and the Annex, lying just adjoining, will immediately begin to become more and more desirable and reap large benefits to those who are wise enough to take advantage of this opportunity.

Everyone remembers how quickly lots have been snapped up in Ansley Park every time they have been offered for sale. It will be just the same with the lots in the Annex. They won't last long. Twenty-five lots in Ansley Park never waited long for buyers.

The wise man will be on the ground early and join in the throng of bidders who realize that this sale means a chance of a lifetime.

The twenty-five lots will be sold at public auction within a short time. We are giving you an opportunity to think the matter over. Go out to the Annex today—look over these lots and give yourself the chance you have been looking for.

Watch for the announcement of the sale. It won't be long.

"Going It Blind"

We Americans are given credit for doing a great many things in haste; and our mothers and grandmothers used to tell us constantly, among the other good, old-fashioned admonitions, that "haste makes waste."

Is not this peculiarly true of most of us when we do our shopping? Do we not fail to give the subject of our year-in, year-out purchases all the intelligent thought and consideration due so important a matter?

And do we not, as a result of this habit, buy many things unwisely, things which aren't just right and which might have given far greater satisfaction if they had been decided upon with thrifty forethought?

It is on this account that we urge upon JOURNAL readers the importance and economy of being well posted on the daily offerings of JOURNAL advertisers.

One can not only plan one's expenditures with greater economy, but can also make better and more satisfactory selections when guided by the advertisements in THE JOURNAL.

Comparison of Principles and Materials of Froebel and Montessori

In a little village of Germany early in the nineteenth century, Frederick Froebel began the work which has done so much to emancipate and ennoble childhood.

In the crowded city of Rome, early in the twentieth century, Madame Maria Montessori seeks to accomplish, even more in educational reform than this wonderful teacher.

"Come, let us live with our children," was Froebel's motto. So he made himself a little child with the children, studied them, played with them, lived their life, free and yet restrained, the fields and the woods as well as a small building serving for their school.

Madame Montessori has made a very practical application of this motto and in a most degraded and dangerous part of Rome has built a children's house, where she or her assistants live and care for the children from 9 in the morning until 4 in the afternoon, the children living so close that home and school are practically united.

For inspiration for his work, Froebel had his own most lovely and desolate childhood, and a desire to give to other children a fuller, happier life.

For hers, Montessori had a physician's training and a great deal of work with defident children, which led her to feel that if much could be done with abnormal children, the possibilities for normal children were tremendous.

Froebel was himself intensely spiritual—his aim, to make each child at one with God—to be thus, he must be in unity with humanity and nature. He saw in each child an image of the divine and sought by his all around development to bring that child into a consciousness of his unity with his Creator. Montessori also looks for an all-sided development, such development as shall produce in the race to come better species of humanity. Both inspired with high ideals.

Montessori has for her basis of pedagogy the liberty of the child, and says: "Liberty is activity." Froebel says, "Education in first principles should be passive, following, only guarding and protecting not prescriptive, categorical, interrupting. Self-activity is one of his most frequent themes.

Forebel's method of education is largely social. Montessori's, individual; the isolation and loneliness of Froebel's childhood and his great desire for companionship made him feel the great desirability and worth of group work among children—the inspiration and joy of co-operation and competition in work and play; the necessity for dealing with deficient children individually may have had something to do with Montessori's method of individual work. the great advantage of which is its demand for entire self-reliance.

Both educators believe in the observa*tion of child and children*, and that different natures need different treatment.

To carry on either system of education successfully, carefully trained teachers are necessary. The spiritual symbolism Froebel saw in his gifts cannot fail to be inspiring to his faithful students, but it is not taught to the child. The emblem of unity, eternity, Deity which he saw in the ball, circle, and ring, his very placement of pupils in circle for talk and games are uplifting to a faithful teacher; she sees before her every little face, a reflection of the heart which is to be influenced by her words and actions, and it seems to me that the influence made by the existance of those faces cannot be proposed by children working individually. Froebel saw in the ball a symbolism of the heavenly in nature—sun, moon—in the cube, the earthly, rocks—in the cylinder that which connects the earthly with the heavenly—trunks of trees, etc. Nature, his great teacher, was constantly to his mind showing a way to God.

Young women who have studied and handled Froebel's material in Froebel's spirit have shown much growth in character, the uplift being manifest in their faces. The greatest asset in education is to my mind, is the character of the teacher, no matter how fine her method, if her character does not match, the result will not be good.

I could find that Montessorie's material held any such symbolism for her, hence it lacks one great quality which Froebel's possessed.

Not having seen her teacher I cannot judge of the influence of her methods upon their characters, but many of them must be unselfish to be willing to live in such a community.

Froebel believed in taking the natural, spontaneous actions and interest of childhood and training them to educational value.

As day seems the greatest interest of childhood, he made it the keynote of his activities so even much of kindergarten work is done in the spirit of play, unconsciously the child is led higher through this happy medium. Work as work enters much more largely into Montessori's methods and play forms a very small part of her long school day's program.

Both educators have many exercises for physical development, and it seems to me their methods of bringing the children close to nature are much alike, in planting gardens, caring for animals, and etc., but Froebel had the whole Montessori the city. Froebel seeming to regard nature more spiritually.

Mentally, Montessori's work is primarily sense training. Froebel also did much for sense training, but he advocated much training of the imagination, that great factor in the production of art, literature and music; he did much for the development of the inventive faculty to which we owe great scientific achievements. Creative activity plays a large part in his pedagogy.

Montessori's material can be used to accomplish only two things, sense training and giving to the child the great feeling of satisfaction in overcoming. Little that is cultured can be gained through it; much that is intellectual. Froebel's material is well adapted to cultural purposes, through it the child can be shown his relation to God, to the family, to nature, to all with whom he comes in contact and can be led to his place and duty as a member of society.

In training the sense the principal things for the child to notice are color, form, dimension, weight, heat, roughness of smoothness, sound, taste, odor.

What does each educator have for this purpose?

In color, Froebel has balls, paper, beads, sticks, crayons, paint, lentils, all nature, silks, clothing, anything with which child comes in contact. Montessori has silks, carpet, blocks, sticks, paint, crayon, nature.

Size: Froebel, second gift and beads, two sizes gifts, sticks, rings, drawing, painting, cutting, tearing, constructing, modeling. Montessori, sticks, stair, towers, insects, modeling, drawing.

Sound: Forebel, nothing but piano, songs, various methods of teacher. Montessori, boxes that rattle, piano, songs.

Why does not Montessori use the ball with its adaptability and joy to childhood?

As a whole, Montessori's material gives no inspiration for beauty nor practicability while Froebel's is well adapted to both.

The kindergarten of today is not the kindergarten of Froebel's day; it is progressive. Montessori does not seem to have observed its progression; it is too often judged by its poor representatives. We must beware of judging her in the same way. The kindergartners of Atlanta are studious, up to date and progressive; we have purchased a set of Montessori material and are experimenting with it in the Froebel kindergartens of the city, so far both the children and teachers prefer our own material, but we think that it is helpful in it and a study of her methods.

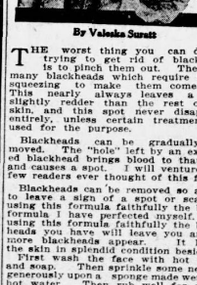
Secret of Getting Rid of Blackheads and Other Blemishes



Miss Valeska Suratt

By Valeska Suratt

THE worst thing you can do in trying to get rid of blackheads is to pinch them out. There are many blackheads which require severe squeezing to make them come out. This nearly always leaves a spot slightly redder than the rest of the skin, and this spot never disappears entirely, unless certain treatment is used for the purpose.

Blackheads can be gradually removed. The "hole" left by an extracted blackhead brings blood to that part and causes a spot. I will venture that few readers ever thought of this fact.

Blackheads can be removed so as not to leave a sign of a spot or scar, by using this formula faithfully the blackheads have perfected myself. By using this formula faithfully the blackheads you have will leave you and no more blackheads appear. It leaves the skin in splendid condition besides.

First wash the face with hot water and soap. Then sprinkle some nerozin generously upon a sponge made wet with hot water. Then rub well for 5 or 6 minutes on the parts of the skin which are affected with blackheads. You should be able to secure the nerozin at any druggist's for fifty cents.

JOSEPHINE T.—Ordinary blood tonics have usually a very slow, indecisive effect on the blood. For that reason pimples have been found very difficult to get rid of. A blood cleanser that is free from anything injurious, that is really wonderfully effective is made up as follows:

Dissolve twelve ounces of granulated sugar in one-half pint of water, add one ounce of sarsene, and mix the whole together thoroughly, then add more water to make a pint. Sarsene is a liquid which you can get at the drug store by the ounce. Get it in the original package. Take one or two teaspoonfuls of this mixture three or four times a day, with a little water if desired.

Valeska Suratt, by Means of Her Own Secret Formulas, Has Made Herself Famous as the Self-Made Beauty-Actress of the Stage.

HETTY—The formula given below for the hair has astounded hundreds of my readers who have used it at my instigation. All are unanimous in saying that it is a marvel in making hair grow luxuriantly, and absolutely stopping the falling of hair. I have known cases where an inch of hair has been grown in one month by its use.

Mix half a pint of alcohol with half a pint of water. To this add one ounce of beta-quinol. Shake thoroughly, and then it will be ready for use. If you prefer you can use imported bay rum instead of the water and alcohol. The beta-quinol you can get at almost any drug store for not more than fifty cents. This formula should be applied very freely to the scalp after brushing the hair thoroughly for a few minutes all over. Rub the tonic thoroughly into the scalp with the finger tips.

The finest shampoo I have ever used is eggol which can be procured from druggists for twenty-five cents. It is surprising in its action in adding the scalp of every particle of scurf and foreign matter which nothing else, not even scrubbing, can do.

Add one tablespoonful of glycerine. Keep stirring while adding one ounce of zintone, until it is all dissolved. Then let cool. If the cream is too thick to pour easily from the bottle, thin it down a little with more hot water. The cream will be white and satiny. Hold a wet towel to the face and steam it for a few minutes. Put this cream on the entire face. Then wipe off with a soft dry cloth. Then apply again and let it dry on the face. Repeat this again at night. Any good druggist will let you have zintone for about fifty cents.

SUSPENSE—There is nothing so wonderful for removing superfluous hair as the following. It irritates or leaves a spot, and never fails.

Get one ounce of simple sulfo solution. This you can get at the drug store for one dollar. Apply it with the finger tips to the superfluous hair, keeping the hair moist with it for two or three minutes until it has been dissolved. Then wash off with a damp cloth and wash the skin.

MRS. B. T. R.—Even those who have never had a proper bust development may acquire it. This formula is absolutely safe and shows results naturally and promptly.

In a half pint of cold water dissolve two ounces ruetone and half a cup of sugar, all well mixed together. Of this take two teaspoonfuls three or four times a day in a wine-glass of water after your meals. The ruetone will cost you one dollar at the drug store.

MISS WRINKLED—For crows' feet small or deep wrinkles, sagging cheeks, the following formula is absolutely unequalled: Pour half a pint of hot water in a bowl and place the bowl in a pan of water over a slow fire. To this add two ounces of eptol. Stir until it is dissolved and starts to cream. Then remove from the fire, slowly add two tablespoonfuls of glycerine, and continue to stir until it is cold. Eptol may be obtained for no more than fifty cents at any good drug store. This cream should be applied very liberally and thoroughly rubbed into the skin until it has disappeared. The cream will not grow hair on the face. Keep the cream in an air-tight jar or bottle.—(Advt.)

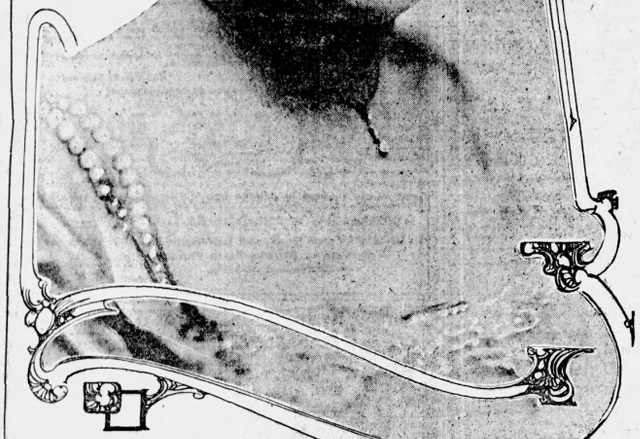
Panoramic View of Cox College and Conservatory Grounds, College Park, Georgia.

For beauty and variety of interest, the campus of Cox college can not be excelled. Rare imported shrubs and blossoms from every clime and of every season are represented in this miniature reproduction of the flora of the globe. Arctic pines and spruces are but a short distance from tropical vines and brilliant beds of color. Quaint and artistic effects are found in this wonderful bit of landscape gardening, where terraces, fountains, pavilion, and rose arbors vie with each other in charm and attraction.

Beautiful to the eye, Cox college campus is of even greater interest to the botanist, for in this small compass may be found specimens that must heretofore be gathered with difficulty from the four quarters of the earth. A complete herbarium may be provided from the campus alone.

Too much stress can not be placed on the importance of beautiful environment in the formative years of a young woman's education. To the art student there is never-failing inspiration; to every one who enters its bounds, there is an uplift, a refinement, and a powerful, though silent, appeal for the best and beautiful things of life.—(Advt.)

A BRIDE OF THE WEEK



MISS ELIZABETH GILDER.

Miss Gilder's marriage to Mr. Oliver K. Johnson, of Atlanta, will be an interesting event of the week, taking place Wednesday at the home of her parents in Newberry, S. C.

THE WEEK IN RETROSPECT

THE Players club presentation was the greatly anticipated event of the week among the friends of those who made their appearance at the Grand in "The Importance of Being Earnest," Tuesday evening.

The members of the cast had given up their time for several weeks before the performance to study and rehearsal and were letter perfect in their parts on the evening of the play.

The play is what might be called purely conversational; there is very little action in it and therefore very little need for acting, or rather, for any other kind of acting than that which the modern idea calls for, the art of being natural.

There were two distinctive character roles delightfully presented by Mr. Hamilton Douglas, Jr., and Mrs. H. B. Scott. Mrs. Slaton is one of the most talented members of the club and was a charming Lady Bracknell whose manner and lovely face won forgiveness for her absolute worldliness.

Mr. Lamar Hill was natural and easy and distinctly English in his role of blase club man and Mr. Marsh Adair was also natural and easy but distinctly un-English, a fact which in no wise lessened the enjoyment of his interpretation.

Miss Hildreth Burton-Smith's debut was a complete triumph for that popular young woman, the other feminine role being played by lovely Mrs. William Owens.

The audience was an enthusiastic one and after the play supper was served on the terrace of the Piedmont club, the actors and their special guests being seated at one long central table, smaller tables grouped the long one and dancing closed the evening.

MONDAY afternoon the interesting event was the marriage of Miss Courtenay Harrison to Mr. Loring Raoul. The ceremony was performed on the broad terrace of Fernbank, the twilight sky of the summer day like a cathedral dome overhead and all about, the trees and ferns and flowers of the lovely country home. Dorothy Perkins roses and hollyhocks with the butterfly blossoms of sweet peas were the flowers used and the bridesmaids, Miss Eleanore Raoul and Miss Agnes Tinsley Harrison were like lovely iris blooms in their lavender gowns, bouquets of pink roses harmonizing with the rose vine which arched the doorway and clambered over the grey stone walls of the house.

The bride, dainty and flowerlike, was a charming picture in her wedding gown of white chiffon and lace, the veil of tulle caught to her curly hair by a chaplet of orange blossoms and the flowers she carried were lillies of the valley.

Mr. Hendree Harrison, the bride's brother was the officiating minister. Mr. and Mrs. Raoul are spending their honeymoon in the mountains of North Carolina and on their return will be at home at Cherokee farm.

THE announcement from Paris of the marriage of Miss Alice Ormond and Mr. James Campbell was of special interest to the Atlanta friends of the lovely bride.

The marriage took place on May 22 in Paris, where Mrs. Ormond and her daughter have been for several months. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell leaving immediately for London, where they will be for a short stay, returning later to Paris, after which they will leave for South Africa, where Mr. Campbell, who is associated with Archie Selwyn as a theatrical producer, will present "The Blue Bird."

Mrs. Campbell has a decided literary talent and has spent the past few years in New York, where she has contributed to the leading magazines and newspapers.

Mr. and Mrs. Campbell will make their home in New York, returning to the states some time during the summer or early fall.

THE Dansants, which have been a feature of afternoon life in Paris during the past winter, are being introduced in Atlanta, and every afternoon the Piedmont club is the scene of congenial little parties meeting for tea, which is followed by dancing in the big, cool ball room.

Grant, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. Milton Mell, Mrs. Harvey Johnson, Mrs. Don Pardee and Mr. Preston Arkwright.

MANY enthusiastic descriptions of the Confederate reunion at Chattanooga have been made, but possibly that of Houston R. Harper, of Chattanooga, is one of the most interesting. Mr. Harper declares that the spirit of southern fellow feeling and enthusiasm was remarkable apparent, while the reunion entertainments were very brilliant.

"There were over 2,000 sponsors in the great throng of over 100,000 veterans and visitors," says Mr. Harper. "Most of them were entertained in homes as guests of our leading citizens. In the camp about 8,000 old veterans had comfortable places to sleep and food at all hours of day and night without a cent of cost.

"A mammoth tent with a fine hard floor provided a place for two great balls. The first was the veterans' and the second the sons of veterans' ball. Nearly 20,000 persons attended each ball, and several thousand couples participated in the dances.

"It would make any one who has a drop of southern blood in his or her veins thrill with pride at being southerners to attend one of these reunions. If everybody did not know everybody they at least had mutual friends. Chattanooga is greatly pleased that our guests declared this was the best and greatest reunion held in the twenty-three years the United Confederate Veterans have been organized."

A YOUNG VISITOR

MISS MILDRED THORPE.

Miss Thorpe is an attractive member of the younger set of Savannah, and, as the guest of Miss Augusta Gardien, on Juniper street, is being delightfully entertained, among the affairs given in her honor being a dance at which Miss Gardien was hostess Friday, seventy-five guests being invited to meet the pretty young visitor.

THE NEW SILHOUETTE IN PARIS

THE one important problem that France has put before America this season is the silhouette. She did the same thing three years ago and it was three months before women took any special notice of it and five months before it was accepted. But, mark you, it was accepted. In that truth lies the interest of the whole situation.

Today she is exploiting a silhouette that is supposed to conform to nature. It came about through the advocacy of the corseless figure. Every one who weighs over 110 pounds found that the corseless figure was much of a myth and can only be real in the figures of such women as the dressmakers employ as mannequins; the woman of average build looks hideous when unconfined. Her clothes do not fit her figure and her figure cannot hold itself properly without some support.

When this was found out then the French produced a corset that allows the abdomen and the front of the waist line to retain the curves of nature, and the back to be held in a straight flat line. This was the silhouette of the directoire. But Paris is calling it the silhouette of nature, which is not quite true because nature produces hips and there are no curves at the side of this new figure.

This silhouette was produced during the latter part of February in the French dressmaking houses and was laughed at by the majority of American buyers and by all the private patrons. But a long line of successes by Paris in the way of changing the clothes and the figure should make any one take a new movement by them under serious consideration.

You may remember that America sneered at the hobble skirt, at the La Vallere figure, at the Drian postures at the natural waist line, at the elimination of the hips, at the flat coiffure with its eartabs, at the slashed skirt, at the high heeled street slipper. Review the last three years and put a pin in every change in fashion which Paris started and at which America laughed and which America accepted more heartily than any other part of the world.

The future is always judged by the past or else experience comes to naught, and therefore one can hardly afford to laugh at this new silhouette introduced by Paris. Three months ago America said that only the demi-mondaine class in Europe would wear the rubber necked coat on the street, but take a walk on any great thoroughfare today and test your powers of arithmetic by trying to count the women who have their necks uncovered in front run to bust.

Do you remember reading columns of written matter during the last six months in which the subject of the slashed skirt was dismissed as purely Parisian fancy and it was said that it was impossible for America to take it up? Well, two months after it was worn in the French ateliers American women were wearing it in the drawing room, and today the mass of women—and you, I do not say the best class of women—are wearing the slashed skirt on the street with as little unconsciousness as their ancestors had in wearing the indecent hoop skirts.

Why, therefore, should there be any doubt that the American women will make up the silhouette of nature? Surely there is a great deal of comfort in letting the waist and the abdomen assume their natural proportions, and while we consider it hideous, it is well to remember that our present ideas of what is artistic are formed on an artificial basis. Not only that, but our ideas change with the changing fashion as to what is lovely and what is not.

It is a temptation to review the various stages and epochs of what man has familiarly called "indecent dressing," because there are many in this generation who seem to forget that this offense has been a part of humanity throughout the centuries. There is less of it done today than ever, and even the epoch through which we are passing, criticised as it may be, is slight compared to all the epochs that preceded it.

The New French Silhouette.

After all there should be nothing offensive in allowing the figure to assume its natural proportions, and this is what the new movement amounts to. It is true that the hips are still flattened, which is different from the last time that the protruding abdomen and waist were in fashion. Dieting, exercise, corsets and the exaggeration of flatness in the figure by the majority of women have all tended to deprive a woman of an overflow of hips. So for that reason she will not have much trouble in assuming the lines of the new figure if she cares to do it.

Whether or not the figure is naturally full in front the dressmakers make it appear so by putting the drapery over the abdomen and across the front of the waist in such a manner that it is not possible to be slender there. There was a fight in Paris last spring between those who wished the drapery lifted the back and those who wished it lifted and gathered in front, and the result was a compromise which we see today on many gowns; both lines are used, with the access given to the bunched drapery in front.

The skilful dressmakers are using wide feather bones at the front waist line of house frocks and evening gowns in order to keep the material in a straight line from below the normal waist to within an inch of the bust. This gives the square effect which is considered fashionable, and the few women who have not the flesh to fill it in find that the whalebone does the work of straightening the line.

The young and the slim may not care for this line, although quaintly enough a large number of them are using it with enthusiasm because it is a novelty, but to the older and stout woman it proves a boon and a blessing. Any woman who has not been able to bring down the dimensions of her figure and has acquired a rotundity which she disliked was at her worst in a skirt that had a waist line, and especially so in a suit where there was a separate waist to a skirt.

Any combination of warments like these gave to her waist an ungainly thickness which could hardly be classed under the name of fashion; it also gave her a shortened underarm effect, and it took a skilful dressmaker to cut off the top of the skirt in suc ha way that the right proportions were given to the figure and yet left it fashionable. This trouble remains with us whenever the summer brings about cloth suits with white shirtwaists, for extension skirts are the only fashionable ones to wear, and in connection with the white shirtwaist they thicken and shorten the line of the figure.

In France they are attempting an extraordinary high waisted skirt which is cut lower in the back than front and gives to the thin blouse which is worn above it the appearance of an empire bodice. There is one very good lesson to be learned from this skirt if one does not wish to accept it in detail, which is that an irregular line above the waist is infinitely more becoming than a regular one.

When women had small waists and outlined them with a tight belt the straight line was all very well, but as soon as the waist line was lifted and outlined a thick part of the figure over the ribs and the muscular part of the back then a straight line was ugly. Few women recognized this fact and they were not aided by their dressmakers or their tailors, who did not seem to watch the idea that it could be obviated by any pleasing irregularity.

Doctor Tells How to Shed Bad Complexion

We cannot restore degenerated facial tissue any more than we can restore a lost limb. It is useless to attempt to convert a worn-out complexion into a new one. The rational procedure is to remove the complexion instead—remove the devitalized cuticle. Not by surgical means, however, as the underlying cutis is too thin, too tender, to withstand immediate exposure. Applying ordinary mercolized wax will gradually absorb the offending cuticle. By degrees a new, youthful skin appears; a skin soft and delicately tinted as a rose petal.

No lady need hesitate to try this. Procure an ounce of mercolized wax of the druggist. Spread on a thin layer before retiring, removing this in the morning with soap and water. In from one to two weeks the complexion is completely transformed.

An approved treatment for wrinkles is provided by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxcoline in a half-pint of witch hazel. Bathing the face in the solution brings prompt and remarkable results—Dr. Rupert Mackenzie in Popular Medicine.—(Advt.)

BRENAU, The College Beautiful;

Its Ideal and Its Attainments

By Mary Carter Winter

Brenau College, Gainesville, Ga., is an institution with individuality. It has conscience and personality. Its beautiful grounds, handsome buildings and thorough courses are the expression of high ambition, devotion, and an educational ideal that recognizes nothing but the best.

All institutions have their ideals just as individuals have; and, as the ideals of individuals vary in loftiness and strength, so are the ideals of institutions on varying planes.

There is a tendency for individual members of an institution to adopt the ideal of the institution, and this is particularly true of colleges because the members are in a formative period.

Because of this plasticity of the student, it is essential that she come within the influence of only the highest and most helpful ideals.

The ideals of a College are relatively permanent; the individuals which compose the student body change from year to year. But each new group of students gradually assimilates more or less the ideal of the institution.

The Brenau Ideal

The ideal of Brenau is refinement. Refinement means fundamental culture and not mere polish. The refinement idealized at Brenau is like the refinement of gold which has been through the crucible. There the refining fires have burned away all dross and the precious metal can no longer be tarnished.

The word "Brenau" means "refined gold."

The picture of the Alchemist molding the features of a beautiful girl out of refined gold is a pictorial representation of the ultimate object of Brenau, to form a beautiful character which cannot be tarnished.

Education at its best is a purifying process, and only incidentally a polishing process. Culture which is no more than skin deep will not stand the acid test of deep and trying human experience.

It is the ideal of Brenau to prepare its students for such acid tests—the common lot of humanity.

That this ideal has been often realized, the lives of thousands of useful women in various walks of life in all sections of the country beautifully testify.

The process of attainment of this ideal is not easy to describe. Negatively, it is not an emotional process. The purification of culture is not a new birth. It comes by means of no sudden transformation. It is accompanied by no cataclysmic emotional paroxysm of the soul.

Religion is a helpful auxiliary, provided it does not degenerate into fanaticism, which is sometimes mistaken for religion, and which is a worse enemy of culture than gross ignorance.

But even religion is not a means of refinement. Some of the saints will be very awkward and uncomfortable when they don the shining robes and promenade in the streets of gold.

Religion mellows and softens human character. It furnishes new motives and vitalizes human interests and enlarges the spiritual horizon. But it does not refine. The process of attaining this refinement of culture is like the process of refining the precious metal. Mixed with materials of every kind the ore is stored in deep recesses of the mountains and among the gravel beds of the valleys and streams.

By chance, or design far beyond our ken, some is gathered here and there and in great, clanging, grinding stamping mills the process of elimination and separation begins.

The resultant, unshapen, crude masses are then sent to the refiner's crucible. Here the process is slow and more intimate. Heat, the most powerful force in nature, is gradually applied. The erstwhile disparate and uneven elements melt together and become homogeneous, and in the process the dross and unassimilable elements are easily eliminated.

After a proper cooling season the refined and purified metal is taken from the crucible and is ready to be adapted to any form of service which its environment and the needs of humanity may require.

As an ornament there is none more ornate; wrought into useful articles for the home, there are none more prized; in the commercial world it fixes the standard of value; in science it is reserved for the most delicate experiments.

If it is not pushed too far, the analogy is very illuminating and helpful.

The great masses of humanity hidden away in the recesses of the mountains and scattered through the valleys and along the streams furnish the new material.

Whether by Divine selection or by a process of elimination for which no better phrase has been found than the "survival of the fittest," some of this material, here and there, is selected and placed in the great clanging, grinding stamping mills which we know as the public school system.

Here the alleviating process really begins. When one considers the amount of material which goes in and the relatively small amount which comes out, having survived the numerous jars and jolts and changes, one is inclined to wonder if all the noise and tumult, the great expenditure of time and money and energy are worth while. But really the schools render quite as great a service in eliminating the unfit as they do in preserving the fit, in the opinion of critics of education might well consider.

The material which the public school system furnishes the college is lacking in homogeneity and is accompanied by much dross in the form of prejudice, egotism, and other hindering traits.

But here is at the same time the source of greatest power and another form of the physical light which illumines the universe, so knowledge—real knowledge—is the source of power and refinement and is the light which illumines the soul of man.

But knowledge is a means and is not to be regarded as an end.

The end to be achieved in placing the gold in the crucible is not to heat it, but by heating it to make it possible to remove the dross.

If the ideal of Brenau has any claim to distinction it lies in its recognition of the fact that the acquirement of knowledge is merely a means to an end—and this end the elimination from the character of prejudice, of egotism, of unworthy thought and motive, and the adaptation of character to the highest practical ends in the service of humanity, which is at the same time the service of God.

Australians Turn Tables On Americans

Visitors Must Win Two Remaining Matches to Meet English Cracks, While the Americans Have One

NEW YORK, June 7.—Playing tennis that ran the gamut from sensational to mediocre, the Australian team defeated the United States pair in the doubles match of the Davis cup preliminary today by a score of 2-6, 6-2, 5-7, 6-2, 9-7.

The victory gave the visitors their first match of the series, which now stands:

United States, 2; Australians, 1.

On Monday the two remaining single matches will be played and while America needs one match, the Australians must win both to secure entrance into the second round to be played in England next month.

For thrills and excitement, no Davis cup tennis match played in this country heretofore equalled that of today. The United States pinned its faith to Maurice E. McLoughlin and Harold H. Hackett, while the island contingent's representatives were Stanley N. Doust and A. B. Jones.

For five full sets these players battled back and forth, first one pair obtaining the advantage only to lose it a moment later to their opponents. Dashing individual play was nullified by wretched luck of team work and marvelous "gets" made only to be cancelled by stupid plays a moment later.

The spice of adventure was added by a drenching thunderstorm, which soaked the majority of the 5,500 spectators and delayed the play for almost an hour. Hardly had the second set been started when a heavy rain descended on players and spectators. Tarpaulins were hastily stretched over the playing turf, while the thousands rushed for the clubhouse. The crowds proved too large for the porches and floors and when the supports began to creak the drenched gathering sought safety again in the open.

The delay and the changed condition of the court, however, turned the tide of victory in favor of the Australians. The heavy condition of the turf took the edge off McLoughlin's game and gave the visitors the advantage that finally enabled them to win out.

While the Californian was the star of the match, the steady team work of the Australians proved too much for him to overcome, aided as he was by flashes of brilliant form on the part of Hackett. The Americans never at any time appeared to understand the technique of double play and either interfered with each other or left territory uncovered, which their opponents were quick to shoot at. Hackett failed to show the form which has marked his play in previous years and both his service and returns, for the greater part of the play were weak and ineffective. Jones proved to be a tennis player who lived up to the reputation which preceded him to America and his service and volleying were both fast and accurate. Doust did not appear to equal advantage, but he did team up with Jones in excellent manner at critical points, which enabled them to stave off the wonderful rallies of McLoughlin.

It is doubtful whether the United States champion ever played better tennis under conditions distasteful to him. Realizing this, the Australians played at Hackett.

Atlanta Off For Six Games

Play Birmingham Three Battles and Then Move to Chattanooga

On Sunday the Atlanta club jumps over to Birmingham to open a series of three games with the Birmingham Barons, the first game to be played Monday. After the three games in this city the bunch moves on to Chattanooga for a trio of battles, after which a return to Ponce de Leon is in order.

The Birmingham and Chattanooga clubs are right now going at a rather rapid pace and Manager Smith and his bunch have their work cut out for them. Molesworth, by the addition of two or three new players, has a real good ball club, while at Chattanooga strength is being added almost daily, and by the time the Crackers hit the Lookout bunch the team should be in good shape.

The series in Birmingham is sure to be one o fthe biggest events of the year. Flag-raising day comes on Monday, and as Birmingham is to try and turn out a record crowd the Crackers will get the advantage of a big attendance. The following week the Cracker club will celebrate the winning of the attendance trophy, and another big crowd will be on hand.

FAST OUTFIELDER WHO CAN HIT THE BALL

Real Hurling By Conzelman

Atlanta Was Ahead 1 to 0 When Rain Came Up and Ended the Game

Rain butted in just at the close of the fourth inning of the third and final game between Atlanta and Chattanooga and there was nothing to do but a postponement. Atlanta led the field at the time, 1 to 0, and with but four more outs needed to make it a game a hardship was worked on Joe Conzelman, Atlanta's new hurler who was on the slab.

Conzelman and Coveleskie were the opposing flingers and both went grand during the short time the playing was going. Coveleskie gave up four hits, one of which was a two sacker, in the 3 2-3 rounds he hurled while Conzelman allowed three singles in four innings. Conzelman walked one or two for Coveleskie and fanned two to Coveleskie's one. This gives the local flinger a big edge at the hurling game.

It was in the fourth round that the Crackers shoved home the lone run. Alperman led off with a hit, was sacrificed to second and scored by Smith with a single to center. Bisland had just been hit by a pitched ball and Agler had popped out when the rain came.

Conzelman looked mighty fine to the Cracker fans who gave him a big reception in the short time he was on the field. He has a nice overhand delivery which appeared to keep the opposing bastmen buffaloed. The distinct feature of that part of the game which was played was the manner in which the two shortstops—Bisland and Elberfield—fielded their positions. Both cut off more than one safe bingle by rapid work and excellent throwing.

BEAUOMNT GETS CHAP

Pitcher Bill Chappelle, lately of the Cracker club, was Saturday sent to the Beaumont Texas league club and will join his new teammates at once. Chap did not balk at going to the Texas team, where he should prove a star.

There are many ex-Crackers with the Texas league teams, several of them being with the Beaumont team. Hammond Reynolds, an ex-Cracker catcher, is now with the Beaumont team, and will be Chap's battery mate.

WHITNEY GOLF CHAMPION ONE ATLANTIAN IS WINNER

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 7.—Nelson Whitney, of New Orleans, twice holder of the championship title, today easily defeated George N. Aldredge, of Texas, for the Southern Golf association championship in the tournament that opened last Thursday morning with more than 100 participants. Neither of today's principals played their consistent game, both starting out this morning apparently nervous and undecided. The intermittent rain of the day, following a heavy downpour last night, made the course heavy.

Whitney outplayed Aldredge in the morning round of eighteen holes, the count being 3 up when play was suspended. This afternoon both men, at times, played really sensational golf, Aldredge at times leading his steadier opponent, but the handicap carried over from the morning was too much for him to overcome, the nearest being when he brought the match down to 2 up on the twelfth hole. Bets were registered that Whitney would win on the twelfth hole, but he was forced to go to the fifteenth, the count then being 4 up and 3 to play. Aldredge proved himself a good loser and was the first to congratulate the new champion.

W. H. Rowan, of Atlanta, defeated C. Hardy, of New Orleans, 3-2 in the finals of the second flight, and was awarded the Alabama cup by the tournament committee. H. Block, the other Atlanta player in finals, was defeated by Dr. O. Kirkland, of Montgomery, 4-3, in the consolation third flight.

Tonight proved to be one of the most exciting and interesting of the tournament at the club house, where Governor O'Neal announced the winners as follows:

Champion of the South—Nelson Whitney, of New Orleans.

Runner Up—George N. Aldredge, of Dallas, Tex.

Consolation Events—First to sixth flights, inclusive, C. H. Munger, Dallas; M. Condon, Memphis; O. Kirkland, Montgomery; C. A. Petrie, Montgomery; Ed Crawford, Birmingham; W. A. Gunn, Macon.

Lowest Qualifying Score—Reuben Bush, New Orleans.

MAYER GOES LIKE WIZARD

Erskine Mayer, the ex-Tech hurler, is certainly ogling like a house afire in the big show. He is with the Philadelphia Nationals, which team is now leading the National league, and the way he is hurling the ball gives Manager Doolin a thought of the epnnant.

Saturday Mayer worked a game against the Pittsburg Pirates and allowed just one hit to the team made famous by Fred Clarke and Hans Wagner. Twice he had the ditsinction of fanning the famous Wagner. He issued just two bases on balls, fanned four, started a double play and stung out a two sacker. If this isn't going good tell up a new idea of good things.

Weston Goes Good

HONESDALE, Pa., June 7.—Edward Payson Weston, who is walking from New York to Minneapolis, arrived in Hancock, N. Y., at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon, after tramping twenty-one miles since morning. He remained at Hancock tonight and will spend Sunday on a farm near here. Weston left New York last Monday.

OUTFIELDER WITH SPEED

The outfield of every ball club is made up of three players. Sometimes you get one especially strong man and two who are but fair, while again you get two good ones and a bad one. But to find a team with three star outer gardeners is quite rare. In fact, it is but seldom that you run across a minor league outfit with three real outfielders, and right here is where the Atlanta club has stolen a march on most of the other teams in this circuit.

Harry Bailey, the mayor of Shawnee, Ohio, is one of the three outfielders, and he is a real good one. The other two Cracker outer works men are Harry Welchonce and Tommy Long and the prowess of each has previously been told in these columns, so now it is up to the writer to give Harry Bailey his dues.

It is in right field that Bailey is now shining. He is a mighty good hitter, the kind that meets the ball square, as well as covering a lot of ground in the outfield and being a good base runner. Right now he is not playing the ball he is capable of turning out, a badly injured ankle, received early in the season, preventing him showing his old-time speed.

A lot could be hammered out concerning Bailey's worth to the Atlanta club, but suffice it to say that he pleases Manager Smith and local fandom, after which a brief summary of his record will be given.

The Cracker outfielder played his first professional engagement at Zanesville, in the O. and P. league. He starred around in the O. and P. and Central leagues until 1911, when he went to the Newark club of the International. There he was such a shining light that he was picked up by the New York Americans and in turn sent to Atlanta, being the only real good player the New York Americans sent Atlanta during the 1912 season.

Last year with Atlanta Bill hit over the .300 mark, was good at the base stealing game, and this year he shows promise of doing even better work. He has started out at a fair clip and with the present team going at anything like a good clip he should shine.

Bill is from Shawnee, Ohio, where he labors at the watchmaking trade during the winter months when baseball work is completed. He is one of the foremost citizens in his native village and everybody there trails the Atlanta papers to keep up with Bill's work.

ROSE MEDALS ARE SHOWN

The three handsome medals offered by Randolph Rose for the best Southern league batter, pitcher and base runner, have been on exhibition at Ponce de Leon park during the past week and every fan who took a peek at them had a word of praise for them. All figured upon the chances Atlanta players would have at the different prizes.

Each of the medals carries a handsome diamond and are valued at $300. R. M. Rose is one of the biggest of baseball fans and always interested in the success of the game. He once was a big booster for the Atlanta club but since he has changed his residence to Chattanooga he naturally backs the Lookout crew. At any rate he is a good fan and for the success of the game and for this reason has offered the medals.

Atlanta At Flag Raising In Birmingham

Big Day in Baronville When Crackers Clash With the Team Headed by Bunch of True Sports in Alabama

Monday is flag raising day in Birmingham at Rickwood field and the Atlanta Crackers form the opposition. It is the day of all days so far as baseball is concerned and Birmingham is going to try and outdo the record attendance shown in Atlanta on the opening day of the season when 8,824 fans braved the inclement weather to get a look at the first game of the year.

Birmingham has been a bit sore at Atlanta since the Crackers took the handsome attendance cup and Rick Woodward and his bunch have been endeavoring to think up some scheme whereby the Barons can slip one over on the Atlanta crew. Another keen fight is to be waged between the cities this month, the big game in Birmingham being flag raising day on June 9 and the big day at Ponce de Leon being set for June 19, when President W. M. Kavanaugh will present the attendance trophy to the Atlanta club.

Each city is more than anxious to turn out a record crowd on these dates and the rivalry is at fever heat. Birmingham is confident more fans will pay their way to the flag raising game in Birmingham than will turn out to see President W. M. Kavanaugh award the attendance trophy to the Atlanta club. It is to be admitted that flag raising day is a bigger event than giving an attendance cup and that the Atlanta club is a better drawing card in Baronville than the Barons are in Atlanta; yet with these handicaps it is about even and Atlanta will make the Barons go some to come out with the better attendance.

President R. H. Baugh, of the Baron club, is already making plans for a celebration following the defeat o fthe Atlanta club in the big attendance fight this month, being as sure of a victory that he is already kidding President Frank Callaway, of the local bunch. This kidding all comes in for its value before the battle but after June 19 it may be different.

Birmingham, Ala., June 2, 1913.

F. E. Callaway,
Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Sir:

I have your letter of May 29, and wish to say that you may think because you beat us on opening day attendance that you can do it again on the day you receive your trophy against the day we raise our flag, but you cannot do it. You may even go to the extent of bringing all your newspapers, Ad club, Business Men's league, and every other institution you have of working together, yet your crowd cannot equal what we will turn out. We warn you if you would like to make a respectable showing to get busy. Be sure and come over yourself and have the other directors come with you.

With kindest regards,

I am, yours very truly,

B. H. BAUGH.

CHAPMAN IS ALMOST WELL

Catcher Harry Chapman's injured leg is now rapidly recovering and it is believed he will be abla to get back in the game by the middle of next week. He was able to limp about without crutches during Saturday and though he did not accompany the Cracker team on the present road trip he may be able to join the bunch in Chattanooga on Thursday.

COBB'S WORK

Although Cobb and his average did not take a jump Saturday, the Georgia Peach has again started to batting the ball at his old-time clip and should be at the top again within the next few days. He was at the plate five times on Saturday in the game with Washington and got two hits. This makes him bat an even .400, and he is now batting .411. It is a funny thing that when a man gets hits his average goes down, but it is a case of a man starting something that he cannot very well keep up. He has set his pace, and now he has got to get his second wind before he again hits his stride.

His figures for the year so far are:

	G.	AB.	R.	H.	P.C.
Cobb.....	33	114	17	48	.411

Flynn-Savage Match Is Off

Broken Hand Prevents Jim Flynn From Filling His Atlanta Date

Word was received in Atlanta Saturday evening from Jim Flynn's manager to the effect that the boxer would be unable to fill his date here with Jim Savage on next Friday. A broken hand received in training was given as the excuse for Flynn's failure to fill the date.

The Flynn-Savage bout as scheduled was attracting no little attention, and it will be a source of deep regret to the fans when it is learned that it won't be staged. Right now Flynn is one of the most likely contenders for the heavyweight honor, while Savage is a young boxer who is rapidly climbing.

Several substitutes were offered for Flynn, but the local promoters believed it a bad example to offer any substitutes, and so cancelled the match. Another good bout will likely be arranged for the near future.

Turtles Down Trodded Pels In Easy Game

Schweitzer Slipped Over a Home Run Which Had a Most Important Bearing On the Final Outcome

NEW ORLEANS, June 7.—Memphis defeated New Orleans in the first game of the series today, 4 to 2. The game was played on a muddy field and was very slow, both pitchers being somewhat wild.

Both teams scored a run in the first inning, but neither was able to tally again until the sixth. Schweitzer knocked a home-run over left field fence.

High Salaries Did Its Share To Kill League

Apalachian Circuit Spent Too Much Money—Towns Are All Small and Cannot Spend So Much Cash

LYNCHBURG, Va., June 7.—Although the present troubles in the Appalachian league are laid at the door of President Smith assessing fines on Bristol players, the real trouble is probably too expensive baseball for the size of the towns generally making up the circuit. A statement made to a meeting of Bristol fans this week showed that of the sum of $2,508.96 handled by the treasurer of the association backing the Bristol team only $731.15 came from gate receipts, and all of this had been expended excepting $22.55. The biggest item in the receipts was $1,315.50, which came from individual donations. Although the season is not yet a month old, Bristol has spent the sum of $1,382.74 in salaries to players, to the manager and for tryouts, or nearly twice as much as the reported gate receipts.

Without intending to criticise the Bristol backers in the slightest, the policy of the association there to make a clean breast of its financial status through the home newspapers gives the opportunity to disclose a condition that probably prevails in all the lower class leagues in the National association. It merely demonstrates that these circuits are attempting too fast and costly baseball for the size of the towns, and when these towns go on the breakers it is but another case of the inevitable.

The National association has fixed a maximum salary, but when the fixing was done the association stopped where it had hardly begun, for nothing has been done along the line seeing that the limit is respected. The limits prescribed by the National association are just about as much weight with the local czars as the limit was expected when formerly fixed by the leagues themselves. They are only made to be broken the minute a team gets far down in the race.

CHICAGO, June 7.—Wildness in the fifth inning enabled Chicago to defeat Boston today 9 to 6. Reulbach started for Chicago but was wild and was replaced by Leifield, who in turn gave way to Richie and when the visitors started a rally in the ninth, Cheney was called to the rescue.

CHANCE WINS

NEW YORK, June 7.—Frank Chance today saw his New York American league team win its first home victory. A big crowd witnessed a brilliant tussel between the locals and Chicago and rose as one man and cheered when Peckinpaugh's hit in the ninth scored Zeider with the winning run.

Keating and Walsh fought a notable duel, which was a draw at the end of the eighth, in which inning the home team tied the score by tallying twice.

It was "Keating" day at the grounds and a thousand of the young pitcher's fellow townsmen from Bridgeport, Conn., were at the game accompanied by a band. Keating was presented with a floral horseshoe, a loving cup, a silver bat, and a diamond stud. Manager Wilson, of Bridgeport, made the presentation address. Managers Chance and Callahan and Pitcher Walsh, of the visitors were presented with floral pieces.

Illinois Wins Track Events

RANDELL FIELD, MADISON, Wis., June 7.—The University of Illinois won the thirteenth annual conference track meet here this afternoon with 47 1-2 points. The Illinois won firsts in five events, including the racket, and scored in nearly every event.

Wisconsin was second with 28 1-2 points, and Missouri, with 14 1-2, third.

Two conference records were broken, Gold, of Wisconsin, equaling the new mark of 12 feet 5 1-4 inches in the pole vault, and Shattuck, of California, throwing the hammer 160 feet and 4 inches. Shattuck threw was within three feet of the eastern intercollegiate record.

Missouri's squad was crippled by the cold. Nicholson, the Olympic star, relied upon to land at least two firsts, failed to get a point in the hurdles. Individual point-winning honors were divided by Thatcher, of Missouri, and Parker, of Chicago, each winning eight points for his school.

The heavy wind spoiled Illinois' effort to break the relay record. The best the quartet could do was 3:27 1-5.

COLLEGE STAR TO MACK'S ATHLETICS.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., June 7.—Walter H. Snell, captain and pitcher of the Brown University baseball team signed today with the Philadelphia club of the American league. He will report June 20. During his four years at Brown, Snell has batted .360 and missed only two full games.

Waldemar Holberg, the Danish boxing champion, spent the winter months giving boxing instructions to members of the Austrian nobility and younger army officers in Vienna. He stated that Austrians are taking to boxing with the greatest interest, and had made up their minds to send a team to the Olympic games in 1916.

Two of Best Games of Season Played in Charleston—Only Three Runs in Both Games

CHARLESTON, S. C., June 7.—Jacksonville and Charleston divided today's double-header, the locals taking the first game, 1 to 0, and losing the second, 2 to 0. As Umpire Barr is seriously ill with heart trouble at a local hotel, players from the two teams were used. They were very unsatisfactory. A crowd of 2,000 saw the twin bill.

O'Brien, who pitched the opening contest, held the champions to one hit—a single to Maurer in the third. Kipp's hit, followed by Winston's sacrifice, with Menefee's double, gave the Gulls the only run of the game.

In the second contest, Foster and Grover engaged in a pitchers' battle, the latter winning out. Cueto's single in the second enabled him to reach first, from where he scored on Smith' double. The second tally was made in the ninth. Melchoir drew a base on balls, stole second, and went to third on Hoffman's single, from where he scored on Cueto's sacrifice fly. Score:

New Orleans Wins Tourney

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., June 7.—The Young Men's Gymnastic club, of New Orleans, won the senior meet of the Southern Amateur Athletic union here today with a total of 68 points. The totals made by the various contestants was as follows:

Y. M. C. A., New Orleans, 68; St. Paul Athletic association (Covington, La.) 28; Birmingham Athletic club 24; Boys' High school (New Orleans) 20; Birmingham Y. M. C. A. 11; Birmingham High school, 6; Atlanta Athletic club 1; Steven (unattached) 5.

Three records were broken.

T. Dutton, of the Young Men's Gymnastic club, put the 16 pound shot a distance of 40 feet 4 1-4 inches, of 1 1-4 inches better than the old record held by R. A. Barker, also of the Y. M. G. C.

Gilbert Ritchie, of the Birmingham Athletic club, broke the discus record with a throw of 118 feet, 9 inches, which betters the old record held by R. A. Ludlam by 3 feet, 10 inches.

Gilbert Ritchie also broke the 56 pound record with a cast of 30 feet 10 3-4 inches or 3 feet 2 3-4 inches better than the previous record.

Americans Are Too Numerous In Athletics

Cambridge Teams Making Cry That It Is Cambridge Against the World in Athletic Meets With Oxford

LONDON, June 7.—The superiority of American and colonial Rhodes scholars at Oxford university is attracting considerable attention in British athletic circles, and a cry of "the world against Cambridge" is being raised by the undergraduates and alumni of that university on account of the growing strength of these athletes on Oxford athletic teams.

In no year since the Rhodes foundation became operative have its beneficiaries been so prominent in sport. The Oxford varsity la crosse team was the most striking example, only two English players being selected. Five Americans played on this team, and the others were colonials. Three Australians rowed the victorious Oxford crew this year, and five Americans and two colonials were on the track team which tied with Cambridge.

Cambridge had a good all-around track team this year, and the wearers of the light blue feel that they would have had a walkover had it not been for W. A. Zeigler, the Rhodes scholar from Grinnell college, Iowa, who took both weight events for Oxford with the greatest ease.

The loss of the shotput was all the more galling for Cambridge, as it was the first time the light blue team contained an athlete who was able to heave the shot a distance of forty feet. Zeigler did not fear this rival, but he was afraid the Oxford-Cambridge inter-varsity record of 43 feet 10 inches, established by W. W. Coe, another American, and came within seven inches of it.

Up to the establishment of the Rhodes scholarship few Americans studied at Oxford and Cambridge universities, and few colonials were to be found on either athletic team or boat crew. The British university man is ultra-conservative, and the inclusion of American and colonial athletes on the team has caused considerable bitterness and feeling. As the athletes are bona fide students and as there are no rules in force at either university barring students of nationalities other than England from competition, nothing can be done, although it is a bitter pill for the Britisher to swallow when Cambridge track experts admit rather freely that the victory of Oxford and Cambridge two years ago over Yale and Harvard was due to the prowess of Zeigler, and they have expressed the opinion that another challenge would not be received from Cambridge or New Haven until the big Iowan had left Oxford.

New Scoring Now Uniform

NEW YORK, June 7.—The new scoring rule which eliminates Fielder's choice and gives a batter under such conditions a base hit has no other virtue than that it will make the scoring uniform in every city.

In a majority of instances the base hit which is to be credited to the batsman will be undeserving. Say, for instance, that there is a man on third base and the batter hits a grounder to one of the infielders whose throw to the plate is too late to catch the runner coming from third. The runner who makes the run possible by reason of his speed and sliding proclivities receives no credit, but the batter who really did little is credited with a base hit.

Before one such plays have been left to the judgment of the scorers as to whether the batter was entitled to a hit or not, and it is for the purpose of making the scoring uniform that the new rule has been adopted, though it seems assured that in a majority of cases the base hit will be a mere gift to the batter and will not really be earned.

GRANEY BACK AS REFEREE

SAN FRANCISCO, June 7.—Eddie Graney, one of the most popular referees of the fighters in this country a few years ago, but who gave up the calling when he became a light promoter, will return to the ring as the third man again on July 4, when he will officiate at the twenty-round bout between Willie Ritchie and Joe Rivers for the lightweight championship of the world at the open-air arena here. Graney was selected as referee by the managers of the fighters the moment they got together.

TIGERS TIE YALE NINE

PRINCETON, N. J., June 7.—A sudden rainstorm put an end to the Princeton-Yale baseball game on University field this afternoon with the score nothing to nothing. Yale had a man on second with only one out in their half of the sixth when the storm broke.

As Yale won the first game of the series at New Haven last Saturday, Princeton's failure to win today would have given Yale the series, but the Yale players decided to play off the tie Monday and make the series two out of three, as was originally intended.

ATLANTA BOYS TO HOLD BIG AMATEUR TOURNAMENT

The city park board has interested itself in amateur athletics and is rapidly arranging for a big amateur athletic meet on the morning of July 4. Three commissioners under Joe Bean, the popular amateur coach, have already been appointed and are preparing to make the meet a big success.

The program for the meeting has been turned over to the committee of four, which is composed of Chairman Bean and Commissioners Reynolds, Burnett and Anderson, and the committee in turn has placed the matter of arranging the program in the hands of Coach Bean. He has had much experience in this line of work and already has mapped out a program which will give every boy a chance.

The meet will be known as the City of Atlanta Athletic tournament and will be held at Piedmont park. The meet is open to all amateurs in Atlanta, the entry list to close on July 1. All wishing to enter can do so by communicating with Joe Bean, city hall.

Already Coach Bean has made a careful study of the amateur tournaments held in other cities and has decided upon a program of events which are best suited for such a meet. The tournament here will consist of 100-yard dash, quarter and half mile runs, running broad and running high jumps, pole vault, throwing hammer, putting shot and a steeplechase race from Jackson and Tenth streets to the Piedmont park race track, all entrants swimming Piedmont lake.

Handsome prizes are to be awarded the winners in each of the events. Already interest is being demonstrated in the announcement of such a meet and a big bunch of entries are expected.

Cross Lands Great Chance

NEW YORK, June 7.—Leach Cross is at last to get the chance he has sought for some time, that of engaging in a twenty-round battle at Tom McCarey's open-air club at Vernon, Cal. Leach will get this opportunity on the afternoon of July 4, when he will meet Bud Anderson, the crack western lightweight, who recently knocked out Joe Mandot, of New Orleans, and has put away Knockout Brown, of this city, with his stiff right-hand swings on the jaw. Easy to Hit As to Catch Says Rickey

Famous Player and Coach Takes Up the Game From the Theoretical Standpoint, Pointing Out the Similarity

ST. LOUIS, Mo., June 7.—Every ball that can be caught can be hit. That is the first principle in the art of batting, according to Branch Rickey, baseball coach at the University of Michigan, former major leaguer and first assistant to Colonel Hedges, owner of the St. Louis Browns.

Rickey has just quit training the raw recruits at the university in the great national game. Naturally, his chief desire is to turn out a bunch of pointers. As usual, he found many varsity possibilities whose places on the regular team would be cinched were they able to hit the ball.

His chief difficulty, he finds, lies in the fact that many boys, after hearing of the wonderful striking records of such men as Cobb and Lajoie, have a deep and ingrained conviction that a good batter, like a genius, is born and not made. Most of them, by the way, think they are in the select class. The others, victims of side stepping and other habits which mean failure to hit, think they are born unlucky. In either case they come with the preconceived notion that hitting is a gift not to be learned, and lesson No. 1 is a lecture on the topic, "What You Can Learn About Batting." And Rickey says its first principle is that any ball that can be caught can be hit.

Armed with any old sort of bat, "Rick" challenges any and all pitchers, left or right-handers, speed merchants or slow-ball artists, to shoot one at him that he cannot deflect from its course with the bat.

With the pitcher in the box "Rick" takes his stand. His eye is on the ball in the flinger's hand. As it starts he watches its course, just as though he were going to catch it. His bat is held motionless, seemingly forgotten. As the ball seems about to pass him, out goes the bat, bingo! the ball slaps against the wood, and there you are.

Last spring when the squad was out on Ferry field, Ann Arbor, Mich., "Rick" hit twenty-nine balls out of thirty batted at him by Sisler, the speediest man Michigan has had in the pitching box for a long time. He explained his ability to do so by saying that all he ever did was to concentrate on the idea that the ball was not going to get by him, if he did not want it to do so.

"Forget all about hitting it out of the lot. Just meet it, that's all. If you do that you're sure to knock a fair percentage into safe territory. And if you do that you're a fair batter." And he doesn't contend that he can make any ball player more than that.

Refusing Offer A Big Mistake

NEW YORK, June 7.—Tony Aste, well known to followers of the turf made the mistake of his life, according to some of his friends, when he turned down an offer of $35,000 for the three-year-old colt, Ten Point. Aste has had a very successful career on the turf. He accumulated a small fortune as a "bootblack king," and invested part of it in a stable of thoroughbreds. The late William C. Whitney, some years ago gave him a fabulous price for Nasturtium, one of the cracks in his stable.

On account of racing being legislated against in this state, Aste has raced his string in the west and south. Ten Point was one of the starters in the Havre de Grace handicap and carried off the honors so handily that he was pronounced the greatest colt shown this season. About this time, a well known millionaire, who had decided to take to the game, came forward with the offer of the amount stated. Aste said that the colt was not for sale.

Soon after the Baltimore meeting was brought to a close, Ten Point was shipped to Louisville, where he had been entered in all of the big stake features. The colt went up again some of the best horses in the first two starts and was defeated. He had a downfall in the Kentucky handicap, of $10,000, at a mile and a quarter. His measure was taken by Rudolpho, one of the outsiders.

According to a dispatch from the Blue Grass region, Aste was so disgusted after the race that he gave orders to his trainer to ship Ten Point east as soon as he could. Aste is a big bettor and it is possible that he has lost something like $10,000 since the horse sported colors on the Kentucky tracks. He is not by any means a good loser. His friends will not be at all surprised to learn of his latest decision.

PROMISING CHANCE YOUNGSTER

YALE BUILDS NEW STADIUM

NEW HAVEN, Conn., June 7.—Arrangements for the work on Yale's new athletic stadium have been completed by the Yale stadium committee. The engineers' plans and specifications were presented to the committee and formally adopted. As a result it was decided to advertise for bids, to be open June 14, and it is expected that the work will commence a week after that date. This is only a short time after the date which was originally set for the beginning of the work and will allow ample time for the completion within the required time.

The contract for the building of the structure will be in two parts. The first of these, the present contract, is the one for which bids are asked, and covers the excavation, embankment, the thirty-two tunnels, and the grading of the meadow below the level of the field. In this contract is also specified the sewerage and drainage plans, and it is expected that the successful bidder will complete his work by December 1.

During the winter the structure will be allowed to weather, and in the early spring the second contract will be let. This will cover the construction of the seats, the architectural embellishments and all the arrangements necessary to make it a complete structure. The coliseum, or "bowl," as planned will accommodate 61,000 persons and in addition to this there will be standing room for 5,000. The question of track athletics in the coliseum was discussed at the committee meeting, but upon the advice of the architects it was thought best to leave the matter undecided until the excavation and embankment were completed.

FOREIGNERS WILL WIN

NEW YORK, June 7.—It is interesting to learn that among the several foreign swimmers who will compete for American titles this year will be seen one of the champions of Denmark, C. Hildegarde, who has become a member of the local City Athletic club. The young Dane, who is only nineteen years of age, is said to have covered half a mile abroad in 12 minutes and 30 seconds, and to have improved since, so that there is every probability of his shattering the obtaining figures of 12 minutes and 18 2-5 seconds, established by Daniels in 1909. At all events he will prove a formidable rival.

The Harvard university la crosse team won the championship by beating Cornell 5 goals to 1, and will arrange a match with Johns Hopkins, winners of the southern section title. The Crimson athletes have won the collegiate championship in cross-country running, rugby football, hockey, soccer football and la crosse.

Kaiser Opens Olympic Track

Big Ceremonies to Attend the Opening of the Giant Stadium

BERLIN, June 7.—On Sunday, June 8, the kaiser will formally open the beautiful new stadium that has just been completed. It is in this same place where the Olympic games will be staged three years hence.

According to the program, the kaiser and his family and German and foreign diplomats will be in their seats at 12:30 o'clock to hear speeches of prominent speakers. Half an hour later 30,000 athletes from all branches and parts of Germany will march past the royal box with bands and banners.

Gymnastic contests and Olympic games will be held until 5 o'clock. At that hour a football match for the cups of Berin, Charlottenburg and the Kronprinzen cup will be decided. Two hours later grand water polo games and fancy military trick riding are held.

The celebration lasts for eight days. Prof. W. M. Sloane, a member of the international Olympic committee, will represent America's interests on this great occasion. On Monday, June 16, he is scheduled to deliver a speech on "Germany, the Germanic Races and the Olympic Games: Brother Nation Little Finland—a Great Olympic Power."

Personally, the kaiser is very much enthusiastic over athletics. He has looked after a good deal of the artistic work in the erection of the stadium. He is looking forward with great expectancy to see the world's greatest athletes perform in Berlin in 1916.

On Monday, June 9, 15,000 young school athletes (boys and girls) will participate in track and field contests. At 5 o'clock that afternoon a football match for the championship of the Imperial Guards is expected to furnish much excitement. Three hours later an illumination and monster musical festival will be held.

During the week great athletic tournaments of all kinds will be decided.

A week after the opening the great Olympic games arranged by the Berliner Sport club, in which other countries can enter its best men, should show up several good candidates for future Olympic honors.

A championship bicycle race is scheduled for 5 o'clock.

The day following the greatest spectacle ever attempted will be staged at noon in honor of the kaiser's twenty-fifth anniversary.

Physical Fitness For Business Men

By Frank Gotch

Various writers and philosophers have mapped out what they call the four estates of man. I presume many others have outlined a fifth estate, but for all that, I am going to submit one of my own.

Let us call this the estate or condition of suppleness—in which one persistently feels the physical joy of living.

To the physically fit no labor is distasteful and no physical task becomes an imposition. It is only when one is practically dragged out and weary when one feels that there is little in life that compensates for the struggle for achievement and success.

This fifth estate of mine is easily within the reach of ninety-nine out of every one hundred persons.

It calls for daily atention to exercise, baths, ventilation, and cleanliness almost to the point of devotion. When one has achieved this condition of suppleness, then all the deterrent influences become abhorrent.

Some of the rewards of this fifth estate may be named as freedom from self-poison, an ability to stand greater fatigue with smaller reaction, the right amount of sleep, practical immunity from bodily pain, and a clear mind that takes a logical view of life and its affairs.

Let us see what the attainment of this condition means. Suppose one were to devote a total of thirty minutes daily to exercise. This could be divided into fifteen minutes of some systematic exercise, such as dumbbells of small weight, Indian clubs, rowing machine, or wall pulley—and another fifteen given over to a bath and a rub-down.

It will be necessary to observe reason in eating, to learn to breathe deeply, and to do all of these things right and in a reasonable manner requires no additional time. This would amount to one-forty-eighth of the day, or less than 2 per cent.

One ordinarily consumes at least 5 per cent of the day in eating, at least 30 per cent of the day in sleeping, and generally 15 per cent of the day in recreation.

For the small cost and the time considered this observance to physical fitness is well worth while.

Morristown Is Now In the Appalachian

ROME, Ga., June 7.—The Appalachian league has transferred the Cleveland, Tenn., club to Morristown, Tenn. This makes the composition of the league: Rome, Ga., Middlesboro, Ky., Knoxville, Morristown, Johnson City and Bristol, Tenn. Jacob Smith, of Cleveland, president of the league, resigned, and E. B. Fisher, of Morristown, was elected to fill his place. The Cleveland players with three exceptions, have reported to Morristown.

Must Pay Salaries First Agreed Upon

CINCINNATI, O., June 7.—The National baseball commission promulgated a new rule, which more clearly defines the salary obligations o fa club to a player whose services are released by the club after the commencement of its contract period. The new rule reads:

"A club which after the beginning of the terms of its contract with him, releases the services of a player to a club, whose championship season had not commenced, must pay him at the rate of his cancelled contract up to the date his salary starts with his new club, provided he promptly reports to and gives services to the club to which he is transferred."

Joel's Jest Wins

EPSON, England, June 6.—The Oaks stakes, or "femine derby," was won today by J. B. Joel's Jest. L. Neumann's Depeche was second, and Sir J. Robinson's Arda third. Twelve ran.

North-South At Race Game

Notables From Rival Sections Once Had Hot Races on Track

NEW YORK, June 7.—In the earlier days of racing in this country there were blood-stirring contests between thoroughbred rivals of the north and south. On the old Union course, on Long Island, the great horses Boston and Fashion spread themselves to their utmost for the honor and glory of their respective districts and for the edification and amusement of their admirers. In those days a horse race meant a general holiday and the contest attracted thousands of persons from all points. It was simply a question of a person having "the price" to be on hand.

There was not then the squabbling among the notoriety seekers because the man from the north wagered on his favorite horse to beat the southern representative. Had any one broken into the amusement for the purpose of elevating public morals, or held up his hands in horror at the sight of a farmer wagering a pair of mules against a flock of sheep on some race, his protests would have been listened to out of respect to his standing in the community, but he would have had a slim crowd following in his wake or sympathizing with his ideas. No one was prouder of a good horse in those days than the true and patriotic American.

In those times men of great wealth and prominence owned and raced horses. The numbers increased as the years advanced until the early eighties, when such names as D. D. Withers, John Hunter, Pierre and George Lorillard, A. J. Cassatt, Representative Scott, August Belmont, the father of the present chairman of the Jockey club; O. H. Payne, W. P. Thompson and scores of others of like standing appeared on the programs. There are still men of the same caliber who adhere to the sport today, but not in such large numbers.

Smith Holds Leading Claim As White Hope

Death of Luther McCarty Removed From Game Probably the Best Man to Jump in and Take Johnson's Title

NEW YORK, June 7.—Luther McCarty's unfortunate ending leaves Gunboat Smith with a better right to the white hope championship than the late claimant was ever able to establish for himself. Had McCarthy lived and triumphed over Arthur Pelky, the question of supremacy would have been settled by a battle between the curly-haired cowboy and the lanky gunner. The present situation leaves Smith in possession of a clear field.

It might be argued that Pelky has some claim to recognition. But as McCarthy was never a real champion and as Pelky has never shown real form the accident at Calgary cannot be looked upon as a matter that advances his standing. It is said that offers have been sent to Pelky for a bout with Smith. No doubt when Pelky has recovered from the shock and is free from legal entanglements such a match will be arranged. But there seems to be small chance that he will ever amount to much.

Pelky is thirty years old. He has been boxing for a period covering the last five years and has never done anything of note. It is hardly likely that he will develop into a good man at this late stage, although Tommy Burns is loud in praise of him.

Apparently Smith will find in Jess Willard, his recent victim, a more dangerous rival than Pelky. Accounts of the California battle published in the San Francisco papers say that Willard made a much better showing than some of the dispatches indicated. It is said that a majority of the spectators thought that Willard had won, and all agreed that a draw would have done Smith no injustice.

Willard took his defeat with the same complacent good nature that marked his fighting. "I thought that I had a good lead and was entitled to the decision, but I am not going to holler," he is quoted as saying in discussing the verdict. Willard also said he would like to try again with Smith, being sure that he could have done better if he had not held back so much.

Evidently from this Willard is beginning to realize that his non-aggressive tactics are not conducive to winning battles. If he can be induced to change his methods there may yet be hope for him. Apparently Smith is none too anxious to face his giant rival again, judging from the size of the sum he demands.

The French authorities recognize the value of scientific athletics and a number of colleges d' athletes are to be founded. The first to be opened will be at Rheims, and the chief college will be presided over by Lieutenant Hebert, who has made a study of physical development. Not only will the college provide facilities to practice various athletics, but they will be a center of study of physical education, training, diet, air, massage, sunlight, etc., in their relationship to perfection in athletics.

"MY HARDEST BATTLE"

---By Ripley

The gunner sailed in—feet and all.

We asked the feet and the gunner 'bout his hardest battle.

Gunboat was willing. He opened his mouth, spread his arms, expanded his feet, and emitted only a faint squeak. Then another faint squeak, as he broke a window with his right gun. Horrors! Then he broke a door with his left cannon (two horrors! and the papera-paying for the damage).

'Nother minute and a starboard broadside just grazed our face. 'Nuff!

We were wise—or otherwise. But we knew positively that Gunboat Smith could not talk a word in the meager spaciousness of the sporting editorial sanctum.

The Gunboat needs a lot of room when he talks. He not only talks with his tongue, but his hands and his feet as well. Don't dast say "hello" to him inside of a building, or he will break a window answering you. Be wise and ask him outside like we did. Ask him out in Central Park—what should you worry about the trees.

Give him room and he will give you information. We wanted information, so we gave him all New York—freely.

And the good-natured, big-hearted, carefree Gunboat told us much information regarding his hardest battle, and—well, nearly everything.

Gunboat has lots of information. Gunboat is a man about the world—about the sea. If the gunner would te.. it on the stage like he tells it in the gym., why, Eddie Foy and Frank Finney would be looking for a free lunch counter. Gunboat has done many things, and he is not ashamed of any of 'em. He will tell you freely, openly, simply, and "big-footedly" about everything he ever did. He should worry with that right-hand punch he has. (I'd tell things which I never did if I could hit like h.m).

Gunboat used to be a bum, and is proud of it. He used to grub nickels along the street, and glories in it. He used to be a rube, and delights in it. And now he is a champion—and he doesn't say a ward about it. That's the kind of boat the Gunboat is.

"I never had a hard fight; they've all been soft," said Smith as he hung his feet upon the hatrack on the opposite side of the room.

"Every time they get hard—why I used tuh start swinging big ones 'till I knocked the hard spots out—but," and Gunboat Smith reached across the room and shut the door.

"But there's one time when the hard spots knocked me out. Want me to tell yuh? All right? Go ahead!" and the Gunboat removed his hat and coat, rolled up his sleeves and freed his vocabulary.

"I was in the navy. On the Pennsylvania. One time that old sea-going hack arrived at N'Yack and I was granted my firs 'shore leav in any navy. I was the first one ashore—and the first one down on the Bowery. It was all new to me, and I was looking my eyes out when I saw a bunch of sailors lined up in front of a saloon.

Here the gunner stopped, brushed a fly off the ceiling and glanced at his feet.

"Say! me feet arn't half as big as Honest! Why I remember when they——"

"Your hardest battle," we reminded.

"Oh, sure! Well, they wus lined up outside, and as I rolled along they ups and hollered for me to join in. Naturally I s'pose it's a free drink or sumthin', so I falls in and we march.

"Oh! Why did I march in that joint! It was that glmmill called the Seven and Eight in the Bowery.

"Inside what did they do but turn out the lights—and they say, fellah! why the murder commenced. Never was in such a all-fired fight in me life.

"It was awful! Didn't fight fair, y'understand. Everything went—tables, chairs, sticks, clubs and bottles. Bottles! you bet! Bottles! It just rained bottles, that's what; so I raised a table for an umbrella and crawled with a wide-spreadin' nose and two inky blots on me face where eyes ought'a be, not to mention several million so it seemed, b'gosh, cuts and bumps decoratin' me sylphlike figger.

"Thank Gawd, tho', I was out—and gash ding it! I was out—out of the joint and out of me pocket. Some bloke slammmed me, with one hand and picked my roll with the other, leaving me a'staring the world in the face—and with a bruised countenance too.

"Me broken pocket hurt worse than me broken nose, and what hurt worse than either was what a guy said to me when I asked him for a nickel.

"Beat it, you bum; do look like a boob, hey?"

"What do you think o' that?

"Couldn't grub a cent, so I started to walk. Got on the Brooklyn bridge, dead tired, sore, and disheartened. I couldn't move another step, so I lay me down to sleep and rest. Just as I got to sleep and no rest some cop—say, did a cop ever wallop you on the bottom of your feet?

"Not yet, Gunner," we said hopefully.

"Well, guess they didn't or you wouldn't be alive today, cause there's nothing in the world that hurts more.

JEFFRIES IS NOT TO BOX

NEW YORK, June 7.—Jim Corbett, who has just returned from a six-months' tour of the Pacific coast, is authority for the statement that there is not a chance in a million of Jim Jeffries re-entering the ring. Corbett says that he spent several weeks with Jeff, and that the latter told him that under no circumstances would he go back to the game. Corbett further states that Jeffries has saved $250,000. He is taking the best of care of himself. He recently made a wager of $1,000 with Barney Oldfield that he will stick on the water wagon for a year. When Corbett was asked the most likely heavyweight he saw on the coast, he said that it was Bob McAllister. Corbett said that McAllister had won all his amateur contests and since becoming a professional had defeated two men.

And with my feet, too," and Gunboat looked sadly down.

"Gosh! I hurt all over!

Well, I moved on, and some time or ruther, some day or ruther, I reached the Pennsylvania, and, believe me, I was a positive proof of one of the hardest fights that ever happened, and I know what I'm talking 'bout."

Whereupon Gunboat Smith arose until his head bumped the ceiling; then, pointing his feet toward the Sharkey club, he walked away on 'em.

Another Ticket To Baseball Fan

J. W. Roberts was the lucky fan on Thursday, and he was Saturday the guest of The Journal at the big double bill that was pulled off between Montgomery and the Crackers. On Friday afternoon he identified himself as "The Fan" that was snapped on Thursday, and was presented with a ticket.

More interest is being taken in this contest every day. There is some little distinction in being picked out of a crowd of several thousand fans. There must be some very distinguishing characteristic connected with the person who attracts the eye of the staff photographer and cause him to snap the picture. A photograph is taken every day, so watch The Journal's sport page; there might be a ticket waiting for you at any time.

J. S. Jarvis, the fast English amateur distance swimmer, has turned professional, and will teach swimming in London. He not only won no fewer than twenty-four amateur association championships, a number only surpassed by the celebrated Tyers, but won many titles on the continent as well. Jarvis won the English 440-yard title twice, 800 yards four times, 880 four times, mile six successive years, and long distance six times, seven times in succession. He also played in fourteen international matches at water polo, and was twice captain of the English team.

Promoters Are Taken to Task By the Boxers

None of Those Who Promote the Game Take Proper Precautions in Seeing That the Boxers Are in Shape

ABINGTON, Mass., June 7.—Luther McCarthy, twenty-one, champion heavyweight prize fighter of the world—a sacrifice to the greed and avarice of boxing promoters.

I do not mean to attack the promoters of this particular fight, but promoters in general of the whole past decade. It has been simply the gradually increasing money-grabbing tactics of the promoters which has finally resulted in this fatality.

Luther McCarthy would be alive today if promoters gave fighters, the public and themselves a square deal. But they will keep right on and many promising boys will be offered up on the same rotten altar as McCarthy—unless stringent laws are enacted in every state providing compulsory physical examination.

Every fighter should be examined several times a week during his training and again immediately before the fight. Then if a boxer were unfit physically it would be discovered before the fight.

McCarthy was not examined regularly during his training by reputable physicians. The result—a life snuffed out. Arthur Pelky, his opponent, arrested, knowing his blow brought on death, and a morbidly curious public given the "privilege" of witnessing a murder, even though unintentional and unpremeditated.

Arthur Pelky is in no way to blame for the tragedy. He was given no information that his opponent was not in perfect physical condition.

If such a thing as poor condition is discovered in a boxer, he should not be allowed to fight—despite the loss of dollars.

There is no individual profit in college athletics. Oarsmen, football players and other athletes are trained to the minute and examined regularly.

The present commercial policy of allowing a fighter to enter a ring out of condition and without being examined, letting him take a chance of being killed, will wipe out the game. It is dying already, and the only remedy is honest promoting.

There is now no world's heavyweight champion, and there isn't a real champion in sight. "Gunboat" Smith and Pelky probably will be matched for several bouts to decide the championship. They appear to be the best of the present mediocre crop.

Jess Willard, the big cowboy, is twenty-six. In the fight game a man shows his class before he reaches that mark. Willard is strong and willing, but he isn't championship timber.

Bombardier Wells and A. Palzer are apparently out of the running. I am rooting for a "dark horse"—not literally—to prove a real successor to the heavyweight title.

Colored athletes are holding their own in eastern track and field competition, the most prominent being Howard Drew, of Springfield (Mass.) High school; A. L. Jackson and T. Cable, of Harvard; W. R. Granger, of Dartmouth; Irving Howe, of the Boston English High school, and Ben Bowser, of Syracuse.

No-Rim-Cut Tires
10% Oversize

Made In Secret

The essential feature in No-Rim-Cut tires is made under lock and key.

It cannot be copied. And a faultless tire without hooks on the base was never made without it.

That's why the legions who wish to end rim-cutting have come to No-Rim-Cut tires.

None Like It

Of course other makers try to end rim-cutting. It's the bugaboo of Tiredom.

More money has been spent on these attempts than on any other tire improvement.

But faults developed and tires came back. That's the only reason why any maker clings to clincher tires today.

We solved the problem by six flat bands of braided wires which we vulcanize into the tire base. We set them at certain angles.

This makes the hooked base unnecessary. It lets you turn your rim flanges outward. Not one of these tires has ever been rim-cut. And in seven years no fault has developed.

This is the feature which we control by secrecy.

Over Rated Size

No-Rim-Cut tires, compared with clinchers, are 10 per cent oversize. That means one-tenth more capacity. And that, on the average, adds 25 per cent to the tire mileage.

So we save rim-cutting and save overloading. And that means so much that Goodyear tires now far outsell any other. It means so much that last year's sales exceeded our previous 12 years put together.

TO DEVELOP LOCAL STARS FOR THE MOTORCYCLE GAME

Intention of Promoter Prince Is to Start Atlantians in the Game

"Is it as hard to ride as it looks?"

The opening of Jack Prince's motordrome at the old show grounds has wrung this question from the thousands who have turned out for practice and have watched the riders circling the steep boards.

The truth is the town is pretty much interested now in the racing motorcycles, and questions are flying thick and fast about them.

Everybody wants to know if it is hard to ride on the track. To this the riders say with unanimity, "No: it's a cinch."

"A lot of local riders want to learn to ride the track," said a Journal reporter to Jock McNeil, one of the star riders. "How should they go about it?"

"Just get on and ride," said Jock.

"Well, what about climbing up on those hills?"

"You don't have to climb them" said Jock. "When you get going fast your wheel goes right up like a squirrel up a tree. The joke is you can't stay down. When you get on the track, even on the 58 degree angle, the track stretches away like a straight road. It's just as easy to do is to hang on the machine and ride. Anybody who can ride on the straight road can ride the track."

Then Jock uncorked some science.

"You must watch out not to climb the track too fast," said he. "The tendency to go up increases as the square of the speed and when you get going full tilt it is hard to hold it down. A machine has been held on a fourteen track banked to 58 degrees when a speed of a mile in 38 2-5 seconds was attained. I guess that is pretty close to the limit. Of course there's the 90 degree track up above, but nobody goes up there unless carried up by some rider from below. It's a dream to think of staying on a 90 degree track at the speed a motorcycle can go. I've been up on that part of the track a couple of times in my life but I didn't linger."

At the local motordrome they are making preparations to train as many local riders as care to learn to use the track. They would like to develop a novice division and are taking great pains with all riders in showing them how to use the track.

It is hardly likely that they will have a novice class ready for the meet, which is set for Tuesday night, but they will have one before long. The board track riding is peculiarly fascinating, and, under ordinary circumstances, is not more dangerous than dirt track racing or even fast road riding. Every rider on the track took up the game because he liked it, and one of them, Harry Swartz, rode in a race on a board track the third time he was on a machine.

GOOD SPIRIT DURING BOUT

CALGARY, June 7.—My views on boxing are these: For boxing pure and simple, which is the friendly cultivation of the manly art of self-defense, I have every sympathy, but prize fighting, that is, boxing with the addition of commercial and money-making ideals behind it, I absolutely and unhesitatingly condemn.

Any branch of athletic sport may exist in the untimely death of a contestant and, indeed, the deaths pro rata in other branches of sport, as compared with those in prize fighting, might be shown to bear a larger proportion in comparison with the number of participants. With these convictions in my mind, I condemn the exhibition provided at this last fight. When one considers that boxers are trained to withstand the physical strain and pounding which they receive in the ring, the brutality is lessened to a large degree.

In the three preliminaries which preceded the McCarthy-Pelky fight everything was clean, gentlemanly and free from brutality, and showed that the standard of such bouts as managed by Tommy Burns is improving and as clean as circumstances will allow. Had the McCarthy-Pelky fight been of longer duration, the world would have learned, I am sure, that as far as McCarthy was concerned, a Christian spirit can predominate even in a prize ring.

I was hoping for Luther's conversion and, indeed, I have a dreading that he was a changed man as he stood up to his opponent. It was my wish that he should change his career and fight no more. Among the last words he heard were those of my short address in the ring.

No blow caused his death.

The doctors and the referee may give their decisions, but it must remain forever a mystery. Luther has now changed. Death itself granted my desire, sadly differently to my expectations.

Brooklyn Sun Sports Davis Wins Fight

GILLESPIE BETTER.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., June 7.—Advices from the hospital today in regard to Jimmy Gillespie's condition were also favorable as ever. Steady improvement continues to be noted.

Each day the conditions are as all the more favorable to no permanent injury as the result of the terrific blow received.

COURTNEY TO QUIT.

ITHACA, N. Y., June 7.—Charles E. Courtney, the veteran coach of the Cornell university crews, it became known, will cease active work at the head of the Cornell "navy" when his contract ends three years hence. He has been coach for Cornell for twenty-three years.

Dubs Should Not Play With Stars

NEW YORK, June 7.—It is a pity the United States Golf association or some other authority cannot prevent more or less irresponsible players from going abroad and taking part in the big championship and other tournaments. It is all very well to argue, as some do, that such players show good sportsmanship in matching their skill against the world's finest exponents of the game, but those who are striving to uphold the prestige of golf in this country regret that players who are come way down the official handicap list should be permitted to misrepresent this country in classic events on the other side.

Since 1904, in which year Walter J. Travis captured the British amateur title, many vain attempts have been made to duplicate the Garden City veteran's achievement. Jerome Travers, Chick Evans and Fred Herreshoff all made miserable showings at different times in Great Britain, and yet a number of players not of leading rank in America crossed the Atlantic this year to take part in the amateur championship at St. Andrews. With the exception of the surprising performance of Heinrich Schmidt, of Worcester, Mass., a three cornered match between representatives of the United States were easily eliminated. By pluckily carrying the old master, Harold Hilton, to the nineteenth hole in the semi-finals, young Schmidt certainly helped to save the face of the United States, but did not succeed in justifying the faith of players not among our topmost golfers going abroad and representing the United States in international meetings.

Finally Game Won At Home

"Keating day" broke the hoodoo for the Highlanders, and Frank Chance's men won the first game of the season on the home grounds. Keating was in the box for the New Yorkers and the whole baseball portion of Bridgeport, Conn., his home town, were at the game in a body, headed by a brass band. A speech was made by Mayor Wilson, of the home town, and Keating was presented with a floral horse-shoe and several other valuable presents from his townsmen. He pitched great ball, and the crowd rose as a man when Peckenpaugh's hit in the ninth scored Zeider with the tying run. Chase's winning run for the home team that has been made on the Polo grounds this year. This would have been the fourth straight defeat if Chance's men had lost.

As sure as the sea is deep, luck will break good for any team that has fought as hard as the Highlanders have. It looked for a while as if it was absolutely impossible for Wilson to get by with the end step in and ruin a perfectly good victory. Maybe they will get to going now and give the New York fans a chance to see some real firstclass, clean baseball outside of the games that the Giants play. All was rejoicing in the baseball circles last night, and the New York players all had a smile on their faces that bespoke of better things to come.

FORMWALT STREET

As the year is drawing to a close, we look back over our year's work with a great deal of pleasure and we think it has been very profitable also. While we are all looking forward to our vacation and much needed rest, still there is a tinge of sadness in parting for many of us. Our eighth grade children are spending their last week at Formwalt and when they leave, ties that have bound for eight years will be broken.

A special invitation had been extended to the parents of the children who were to receive prizes so there was quite a proud and interested audience that assembled at our school Friday morning.

The highest honors, two beautiful gold watch fobs, presented by our principal, Mrs. Sams, were won by William Johnson, of the eighth grade for a perfect record in department and a most satisfactory one in scholarship, covering a period of eight years and for having the honor of being the leader of the boys promoted to the High school.

The other watch fob was awarded to Frank Ruskin, of the eighth for a beautiful record in department and scholarship for seven years, having entered Formwalt in the second grade. Frank has the honor of having led on the roll of honor oftener during these years than any boy of the eighth grade. His rival, William Johnson, beat him by a margin of 6 only for this year. We are expecting these two boys to do Formwalt great credit in the High school.

Georgia Bell Withers received the medal for being the class leader for the year.

In looking over the year's work the seventh graders feel that they have cause to congratulate themselves. Out of the four pictures offered by Mrs. Sams to the grammar grades they have won three of them.

The class leaders are Stanton Hale and Christy Holmes. They have the honor of having skipped the sixth grade and at once took the lead in the seventh.

The prizes awarded were as follows: Christy Holmes and Stanton Hale, for leading the class; Minnie Lee Burchfield, Nellie Reynolds, Nellie Harrington, Minerva Smith, Willie Reynolds, Don Moore, Forrest Garrard, for perfect attendance; Maggie Williams, Ruth Moore, for perfect deportment.

Gladys Barton won the prize in the sixth grade for having led the honor roll the greatest number of times. Mary Lee Wilhelm received the prize for the neatest hygiene and geography note books.

George Freeman, of the fifth grade, has led the class every month this year. Max Feldman has made a close second. Ethel Bradley has led the girls the most number of times.

George Freeman and Max Feldman were awarded prizes for general excellence, John Hale for faithfulness of attendance and excellent deportment, and Lanier Alden for great improvement.

In the fourth grade, Kellogg Maddox led the boys in class standing and Lillian Brantley the girls. They were awarded prizes. Pyona Theo Locian was awarded a prize for excellence in deportment for the year.

Eva Lassiter and Fain Abbott are the prize winners for general excellence; Ethel Cantrell and Fain Abbott for the neatest copy books, and Morris Spivack for the highest average in arithmetic. He has an average of 99.6, almost perfect.

The class leaders for the year from the second grade were Lilla Fifer and Francis Mott.

Those that received prizes in this grade were Lilla Fifer, for being perfect in attendance for the year; Ruth Garrard, Lilla Fifer, Helen Gerakitis and John Baldwin for having the most stars in written spelling. Each of the prize winners received a book of fairy tales. The second grade congratulated itself upon having the best attendance of the primary grades for the year, having won both pretty pictures offered by Mrs. Sams.

The leaders in First A were Grace Garrison and Edward Wilder. These little ones made a fine record for the year, and were given a story book for the excellence of their work.

In the first grade B the class leaders were: Nora Reis and Lowell Battle.

Nora Reis was awarded a prize for having made 100 per cent for the year in deportment, arithmetic, spelling and dictation.

HILL STREET SCHOOL

We are proud of our school attendance this year. Forty-two children have never been absent nor tardy the whole year. They are as follows:

Eighth—Annie May Cooper.

Seventh—John Peacock, Fred Cason, Agnes Cunningham, Louise Mabry, Thelma Dickens.

Sixth—Marion Williams, Ellinor Brooks, Edna Hamilton, Frederick Wooding, Marcelline Hunerkoph.

Fourth B—Howard Coker, Travis Perkins, Rosser Cooper, Edith Moss, Helen Parden, Jewell Brooks, Alberta Bieser, Alice Cason.

Third—Elizabeth Allen, Lawrence Gifford, Katherine Ivey, Will-Ella Guill, Guill.

Second A—Joe Smith, Robert Parden.

Second B—Carl Wingard, Willie May Coleman, Essie McGill.

First A—Florence Smith, Mildred White, Mary Lyan Owens.

First B—Mary Smith.

The eighth grade children gave a pay entertainment Friday. The money we made went to pay our debts, and we have some left as a surplus in the treasury for next year.

Lois Bell, of the sixth grade, received a prize for the best map of the United States in her room. The map was hand-colored and lettered and was very pretty.

Our parent-teacher club held its monthly meeting last Tuesday afternoon. The mothers prepared a luncheon for the teachers, and Dr. Stevens rendered a lecture.

Meredith Preston, Ruth Lilly and Charles Thrash, of the second A, who have been absent on account of illness, have returned to school. The children of that class are very glad to see them back.

Edna Hamilton, of the sixth grade, received an interesting letter from London. The letter told of how the suffragettes are thrown into prison and starved to death. It also described the king and queen visiting Woolwich.

NORTH AVENUE SCHOOL

On Friday afternoon, May 30, the Parent-Teacher association entertained the eighth grade at an informal reception after their business meeting and an interesting talk by Miss Mary Barnwell. Light refreshments were served and everyone had a very delightful time.

The seventh and eighth grades gave an entertainment on June 3 in *the auditorium. The program was en*joyed immensely by the audience, among whom were the fifth and sixth grades.

An oratorical contest was held by the third and fifth grades on June 3. Those taking part were:

Fifth grade: Frank Keen, Welch Geeslin, Frank Morris, Ira Hardin, Jerome Sands, Victor Hollingsworth, Percy Lambright, Bert Harless, Kerfoot Hancock, John May, John Miller and Frank Veltre.

Third grade: Champ DeSaussure, Grace Veltrie, Weston Branner, Sadie Pomerance, Janet Cameron, Ruth Mayson, Mattie Kellam, Mat Malone.

Every one of the pupils did exceedingly well, and the judge had a hard task in selecting the prize winners. They decided, however, that the first prizes should be awarded to John Miller and Mattie Kellam; the second prizes to Welch Geeslin and Champ DeSaussure, and honorable mention given Percy Lambright, Janet Cameron and Mat Malone.

The fifth grade winners of this and previous contests declaimed against one another. They were John Miller, Frank Lake and John Malone. All three of the boys did splendidly, but the judges were unanimous in deciding in favor of John Malone, who recited "The Unknown Speaker." The applause he received was almost deafening and the boys in his room were so proud of him that they carried him home on their shoulders.

On Wednesday, June 4, the "juniors" (seventh grade) will give the "seniors" (eighth grade) a banquet (spread) in the gymnasium. There will be songs, made to order for the occasion, a plenty to eat and the "seniors" will receive mock diplomas.

Friday will be considered class day by the eighth grade. On this, the last day of school, they will burn the front pages of their mutilated books, and bury the ashes. Songs will be sung, some speeches made, and the eighth grade will leave, most of us never to return as pupils. Of course, we are glad school is over, but we hate to think of it being the last year of our grammar schools days. Many of us have been in North Avenue school since it was built, which was six years ago, and we, with others who have come in later, love it, feel sorry at the thought of leaving. Especially hard is to part with Miss Smillie, our principal, who has been the best of friends and teachers to us all.

LEE STREET

Our entertainment, which was held Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights, was a grand success. About 250 children took part and each child did his part so well that it was enjoyed by every one. It was repeated Thursday morning for the school children and this was one of the most appreciative audiences of all. Each night the auditorium was packed and we hope that our efforts have not been in vain. We made a large fund, which will be used for school purposes.

We are very sorry to leave dear old Lee Street school and shall never forget it.

As I am leaving this year I will give my correspondence to an eighth grade pupil of next year.

We wish to thank the friends of Lee Street school for the interest they have taken this year and also The Journal and especially the editor of the school page, as we consider them our best friends.

We wish all a pleasant vacation.

We all are studying hard yet, waiting impatiently for Friday to come.

Most of us will get promoted, but there are a few who are unfortunate.

Recital, "Bible Boys and Girls"—Lorene Glass.

"The Truthful Boy"—Alvin Cook.

"Rules in a Verse"—Calvin Walters.

"Homesick Kind"—John Carter.

"Two Men"—Louie Broadwaters.

"I Must Guard Them"—George Carter.

"Sing a Song"—Luke McEwen.

"Nobody's Child"—Mary Brown.

"A Helping Hand"—Jerome Eckles.

"Over the Hill to the Poorhouse"—Louise Cook.

"The Gambler's Wife"—Ruth Peeples.

"Somebody's Darling"—Grady Jacobs.

Dialogue, "The Story of a Peach Pie"—Kenneth Lankford and Myra Traynham.

"The Sick Baby"—Hubert Martin and Myra Traynham.

RUTH PEEPLES.

PRYOR STREET

Our school has been having gay festivities all the week, this last week for the eighth. Monday night our splendid entertainment for the Improvement club took place. The plays of "Cinderella" and "Dispelling Big Jim" attracted much attention, as well as the graceful minuets and dances by the lower grades, and, with the band playing between numbers, made an altogether excellent performance. "Cinderella" was beautifully portrayed by thirty-three children, mostly from the sixth and eighth grades.

Tuesday afternoon we had a repetition of the performance, which, although we did not have the band, was better in some respects than the night performance. We collected $68.40, which, with expenses deducted and the $20 we owe on flowers, left $40 in the treasury of the Improvement club.

Wednesday an exceptionally fine debate was enjoyed. It was on the much-discussed Japanese land ownership question, the affirmative (that foreigners should own land) had for its leader Will McMurry, while the other members were William Steele, Jr., Fred Muller and Richard Haden. The negative was ably led by our venerable Carl Jones, who was assisted by Wendell Maddox, Newton Catlett, Clyde Kimball and Earle Dean. Hugh Davis presided. After each side had ably argued, the judges withdrew and, when they returned, announced that the negative had won in this contest of brains and voices.

On Thursday the eighth grade had class day with senior yarns, prophecies, songs, jokes, criticisms, wills and a history of the class.

We want to say that Miss Parks' love stories will come out of just as loving heart as Miss Roddey's poems. After these we have been highly enjoyed by all present, a hush fell upon the audience, as we waited in suspense to see who had won the various medals. The first medal, for arithmetic, was given to Will McMurry. Those for elocution were then awarded. For the girls Addie Coleman came first and Helen Frankel second. For oratory Earle Dean got first medal and William Steele, Jr., second. All successful contestants expressed their thanks with feeling to their kind teachers. These contests have certainly done much in developing skill in the various branches.

Friday we had a free entertainment in the form of a meeting of the Courtland S. Winn society. The principal number was a play by the seventh grade, entitled "The Spiegles Family," and it was by no means dry. After this the president, William Steele, Jr., made his closing address. Speeches were also made by Carl Jones and Lee Wilkie, who hold offices in this society and the Improvement club. Earle Dean also made a farewell address. Then the society adjourned with the realization that one more eighth grade would be gone with Pryor in their hearts.

I wish to say that my year of writing to The Journal has been one of great pleasure. It will linger in my mind as one of my happiest. I hope that my letters have done some one good, and, if they have, my work is well repaid. For this last time I subscribe my name to an Atlanta Journal school letter from Pryor.

CHARLES EARLE DEAN.

COMMERCIAL SPEAKERS

Joseph H. Stanfiel, at left, and Sam Eplan, who represented the business department at the B. H. S. graduating exercises Friday night. Stanfiel was the valedictorian, while Eplan was class orator, his subject being "The Gospel of Service."

DAVIS STREET

We were not a bit surprised to hear that we had won the prize for the school yard showing the greatest improvement. We have worked very hard on our yard and expect to make it the most beautiful in the city.

We gave a candy pulling last week and cleared $53. Counting that in with our two first prizes, we have made $120 since April 15. Pretty good, isn't it?

This is our last week of school, and on Friday we will have to say goodbye, but not for very long, of course, for every one is coming back next year except the eighth grade, and they will meet us so often on the playground that they will not have to bid farewell, either.

On Tuesday the eighth grade entertained the fifth, sixth and seventh grades and their friends and parents. The program was very interesting. It was as follows:

A Play, "Gossip"—Six girls.

Selections on the phonograph.

Reading, "Mud Pies"—Lois Jackson.

Dialogue, "Mrs. Ruggles"—Nine pupils of the eighth grade.

Declamation, "Patrick Henry's Appeal to Arms"—Will Cowan.

"Mudder's Boy"—Cuba Bell and John Harris.

"Bugle Song"—Eight pupils of the eighth grade.

Piano Solo—Miss Laura Wood.

We were very glad to have Mr. and Mrs. Haden with us. They talked to us and made us very happy by their presence and encouraging remarks.

This is our last letter for this term. We will close it by wishing everybody a happy vacation.

LOIS JACKSON.

CALHOUN STREET.

Calhoun school has had a prosperous year all around. All grades have done well and individual children have made some splendid records. In the Memorial day parade we showed up well; at Field day our school took a prominent part in the afternoon exercises, and in the morning one of our boys won a medal, the baseball games between the grades have been close usually and interesting. The Eighth Grade Literary and Debating society has proven a decided success. Five debates have made our meetings enjoyable, besides numerous other numbers.

The second grade has received five stars in music and physical culture combined, which is a record that is envied by many another grade. The teacher gave a prize to the pupils who made the best averages for a "term." The first term was from September to Christmas, the second from Christmas to Easter, and the third from Easter to June. The winners for the last term are Stewart Jones and William Hargate.

In the sixth grade many children have made good marks, but Jeannette Russ, Felix Fewell, of the girls, and Ogden Johnson, of the boys, made the best records for the year.

The eighth grade boys also have acquitted themselves well on the field of sport. The grade as a whole has done good work for the year. We beat the Georgia Avenue eighth grade in a spelling contest and won over the seventh grade also.

Our candy pulling was a decided success. We expect to have several beautiful pictures next year from the proceeds of this entertainment.

The last meeting of our society took place Thursday, June 5. The subject for debate was carefully selected and we think was one of the closest of any we've had. The program was as follows:

Piano, "Melody in F"—Annie Dow Wurm, eighth grade.

Recitation, "My Shadow"—Harriet Brown, second grade.

Recitation, "The Fate of Charlotte Rune"—Dorothy Henson, fifth grade.

Recitation, "The Isle of Endless Play"—Emily Arnold, fourth grade.

Song, "The Drum"—Ten children of the third grade.

Debate, Resolved, That the farmer is more useful to society than the mechanic." Affirmative, Joseph Watson, leader; Fern Kellam, Benjamin Holmes; negative, Charles Wilkes, leader; Samuel Wallace, George Brown.

The negatives won the debate.

The eighth grade had the attendance banner for quite a while, but the little second grade secured it for the last week. The eighth was very much disappointed, of course, as the hours of the last week will find no banner in our room.

WILLIAM CHARLES WILKES.

OAKLAND CITY.

My! but we are having good times out here in Oakland City! Our school was awarded a volley ball set for good work in athletics and now we have games at every recess, and enjoy them thoroughly. We are also quite proud of our seventh grade boy, Ben Montgomery, who came in for third place on field day. His button came a few days ago, and we thought it very pretty.

Mrs. Osgood and Miss Smith made their last visit to us a few days ago. They said they spent a pleasant day and found good work in drawing everywhere. We are always glad to see them and hope they will have a pleasant vacation.

We can hardly realize that our school work is so nearly over, and that in a few more days our school house will be lonely and deserted. Of course, we will be glad when vacation come—both teachers and pupils will enjoy the rest and the freedom, yet there is always an element of sadness in the thought of the last day. We have had a happy and profitable year. Our teachers have been patient and painstaking in their efforts to help us help ourselves. We have made many strong friendships among them and among our classmates. We know that perhaps some of our teachers may be sent to other schools, and that our fellow-pupils may move out of our district and not be with us any more. So when that last day comes, and we think of the probable "parting of the ways," some of the eyes will be filled with tears and the little soft quivering lips will speak very flattering good-byes.

Ink Stains Removed

(New Cork Tribune.)

Ink stains on garments can be soaked out with a mixture of salt and milk. I use a teaspoonful of salt to nearly a half glass of milk. This solution can be used for either white or colored fabrics, but if the ink has been allowed to dry it will be necessary to soak the stained part in the milk for an hour or two.

4,000 MERCHANTS ARE EXPECTED TO ATTEND AUGUST MEETING OF SOUTHERN ASSOCIATION

DIXIE DEALERS WILL ASSEMBLE HERE FOR MID-SUMMER VISIT

Meeting of Officers and Members Is Held and Committees Named for Entertaining Visitors August 4-16

INTERESTING PROGRAM NOW BEING PREPARED

Finance Committee Will Complete Canvass for Entertainment Fund This Week—Program Announced Next Sun.

An incoming of southern merchants to Atlanta for a mid-summer visit and celebration greater than any previous similar gathering known to the city is in prospect.

The Southern Merchants' association will hold its annual meeting here from August 4 to August 16, and it is thought that the gathering will bring to Atlanta during the two weeks of celebration fully 4,000 retailers from all parts of the south.

The officers of the association and a representative number of its members met in Atlanta Thursday, decided on the date for the convention and named numerous committees to look after the work of entertaining the visitors.

Good progress has already been made in raising the entertainment fund, and the finance committee will complete this part of the work early this week. Atlanta manufacturers, jobbers and other business men will be visited by the members of the committee and are urged to contribute liberally to what will be by far the most important commercial and social gathering of the year.

Some idea of the magnitude of the association and its increasing value may be judged from the fact that two years ago, when the first Merchants' week was held here, it brought 900 visitors. Last summer this figure had grown to 2,000 and this year preparations are being made for double the latter number.

An entertainment committee of twenty-six members has been named, and in addition to this general committee special committees on attendance at the baseball games and theaters have also been appointed. The pleasure features of the gathering will therefore be well looked after. They will be both numerous and elaborate but neither too numerous nor too extensive to tire the visitors. In addition to this the merchants will be the special guests of the manufacturers and jobbers, and the various plants and wholesale houses will keep open house during the period.

As soon as the finance committee completes its canvas for funds a meeting of the program committee will be called and the proceedings for the entire two weeks will be formulated and published. It is expected that the program will be completed in time to appear in next Sunday's Firing Line.

The coming of the merchants in August has removed the discussion of holding at the same time a manufacturers' show of Atlanta-made products similar to the successful exposition held last year. This show proved a matter of amazement to Atlantians as well as to the visitors. So successful was it that it is thought to be an easy matter to repeat the success this year. It is likely that the matter will be presented to the manufacturers at an early date.

The officers of the Southern Merchants' association are Rolling H. Jones, president; R. O. Couch, of Griffin, vice president; Willis E. Ragan, of Atlanta, vice president, and Harry T. Moore, of Atlanta, secretary.

The committees named by the association for the August convention are as follows:

Finance—Willis E. Ragan, chairman; C. H. Arnold, B. M. Blount, Leonard Brown, J. H. Dougherty, Harry C. Fisher, L. E. Floyd, Sig Guthman, E. M. Hudson, J. R. Little, C. W. McClure, A. C. McHan, J. K. Orr, Jr., F. J. Paxon, Meyer Rosenbaum, W. O. Stamps, T. N. Stewart, W. A. Ward.

Entertainment Committee—Willis E. Ragan, chairman; Preston Arkwright, W. J. Blalock, Beaumont Davison, H. C. Fisher, Louis Gholstin, Frank Hawkins, Clarence Haverty, Clyde L. King, Gordon P. Kiser, R. F. Maddox, T. D. Meador, H. Y. McCord, J. K. Orr, Jr., Meyer Rosenstein, E. L. Rhodes, J. D. Rhodes, J. D. Robinson, C. I. Ryan, W. A. Speer, W. O. Stamps, T. N. Stewart, S. A. Swann, R. S. Wessels, H. B. Wey, W. H. Wyatt, A. Ward.

Committee on Program—Rolling H. Jones, chairman; H. E. Choate, R. O. Couch, of Griffin; C. W. McClure, E. O. Thomas, J. W. Vaughn, of Cartersville.

Committee on Baseball—H. S. Collingsworth, chairman; Lynn Fort, J. R. Little, E. M. Hudson.

Committee on Theaters—Meyer Rosenstein, chairman; L. E. Floyd, E. G. Thomas, Jerome Silvey.

GETTING READY FOR COMING OF MERCHANTS

HOTEL LAW MUST BE ENFORCED IN GEORGIA

Shackelford Says No Enforcement Now Because Various Local Authorities Won't Act

Editor Firing Line:

The United Commercial Travelers, through the grand council, has taken up the enforcement of the hotel bill. This bill has been on the statute books since 1910, and although it is violated every day, so far there neevr has been a prosecution for this violation. Every one who has studied the bill knows the reason why. (Because it is left to the local authorities, for enforcement, and the local authorities for political reasons, will not prosecute.)

Now, the traveling man, in justice to himself and all others who are compelled to make the hotels their home two-thirds of the time, are demanding of the coming legislature that they amend this bill to include a hotel and sanitary inspector. An officer who is not subject to local influence, and one who will see that the bill is enforced.

I would like to say for the best hotels that they do not need to be legislated into common decency and cleanliness, but the proprietor who does not care for the comforts of his guests, but only looks for the profits regardless of the health and protection from death by fire, are the ones we are after. And as I now see it, only the strong arm of the law will compel this kind of a vulture to make what is now called a hotel clean it up.

We are not making this fight to persecute any one and the honest hotel man knows it, and is heart and soul with us. We know that if it was not for the traveling man, two-thirds of the hotels would be out of business. And at any rate, where we are paying $2, $2.50 and $3 per day we are at least entitled to eat without the company of flies, and when we retire at night to sleep, knowing that the hotel is provided with fire escapes, in case of fire. Or in other words, provided with the comforts that comon decency entitles us to.

MANUFACTURERS TO DECIDE ON DISPLAY BUILDING AT DINNER

Meeting Called by the Chamber of Commerce for June 24, When Details of Plan Will Be Presented by Brooks Morgan, Committee Chairman

To hear plans for securing a building for a permanent exhibit of Atlanta-made goods, the manufacturers of the city will be called to met at a dinner to be given under the auspices of the chamber of commerce on Tuesday night, June 24. The plans will be presented in detail by Brooks Morgan, chairman of building committee. Following his presentation, it will be decided whether or not Atlanta is to have an enterprise such as has proved wonderfully successful in Chattanooga and other progressive cities, north and south.

The recent trip of manufacturers and chamber members to Chattanooga to inspect the building there has given a big impetus to the movement for a similar institution here. All who made the trip had nothing but praise for Chattanooga's exhibit and the alert spirit shown by its industrial leaders. The time, they declare, is ripe for Atlanta to have an even bigger and better building than its neighbor city. The dinner is called for the purpose of materializing the plans that have been discussed for several months.

"Mr. Morgan, chairman of the committee," said Secretary Walter Cooper, "has gone into the practical details both of securing and operating the building, and has done this from every angle. The plans that he will present at the dinner are very interesting and will, I believe, be received with enthusiasm by every manufacturer present.

"When his proposition is made, it will then be up to the manufacturers to say whether or not, they indorse the plan and whether or not enough firms will participate in the enterprise to insure its success. The building can be secured and the institution launched if we can secure 100 manufacturers at the start. Chattanooga already has 129 exhibitors. While it will take on 100 to give us a start here, I expect to see this number far surpassed at the dinner and when the exhibit is a going concern and its benefits become plain, I expect further to see it so largely patronized that we can boast of the most remarkable exposition of the kind to be found anywhere in this section of the country.

"At the dinner on June 24 Mr. Morgan will be able to give all details about the cost of the building and price of exhibit space. So feasible, it seems to me, is the proposition that it will be taken up at once and put into full operation in a very short time."

The decision to have the manufacturers' dinner was reached at a conference held last Thursday by President Wilmer Moore of the chamber of commerce, Secretary Cooper and Chairman Morgan.

GIDEONS ORGANIZE CAMP AT ROME

Returning Delegation Will Make Report at Meeting This Afternoon at 3 o'Clock

The Rome camp of Gideons, the Christian Commercial Travelers' Association of America, was formally organized last week through the efforts of the Atlanta camp. Those who went from Atlanta were A. D. Todd, state president; C. H. Burge, president of the Atlanta camp; C. W. Hatcher and W. L. Hardin. The officers chosen by the Rome camp are L. D. Yeargan, president; Cary J. King, vice president; H. L. Gray, secretary and treasurer; A. C. Weems, chaplain.

The returning delegation from Atlanta will give an account of the Rome organization at the regular meeting of the Atlanta camp this afternoon at 3 o'clock at the Piedmont hotel. The public is cordially invited to attend.

"The camp at Rome is a splendid one," said C. H. Burge, "though not organized with quite as many members as the Athens camp, but they are as fine a lot of Christians as you could find anywhere in the country.

"The list of charter members was left open until next Monday, so as to get as large a membership as possible. Probably it will then be larger than the Athens camp. The boys in Rome are in earnest and I believe that Rome will be one of the livest camps in the state."

GEORGIA T. P. A.'S, IN HAPPY MOOD, ARE OFF FOR RICHMOND

Large Delegation Leaves for Virginia City to Attend the National Convention of Their Order June 9-14

EXPECT TO HAVE THE TIME OF THEIR LIVES

Business Sessions to Be Interspersed With Delightful Social Features—Two Cities Want Next Meeting

Off for Richmond! This is T. P. A. week all over the United States. A large delegation of Georgia T. P. A.'s left Atlanta yesterday at 1 o'clock for Richmond, Va., to attend the national convention of the Travelers' Protective association, which will be held in that city June 9-14.

The organization has the biggest membership in its history, and this will be reflected in the Richmond convention by the largest attendance and greatest enthusiasm yet recorded. The members of the Georgia delegation were in a happy mood when they gathered yesterday afternoon at the Union station preparatory to leaving for Richmond. They were already enjoying in anticipation the good things awaiting them in the Virginia city.

The party consisted of Jesse W. Bates, president of the Georgia division; J. H. Andrews, secretary; R. A. Broyles, national director; Albert Ehrlich, chairman of the national hotel committee, and the following delegates: J. Lovenstein, Ferdinand Newberger, M. F. Meyer, of Post A, of Savannah; F. B. Florence, M. M. Anderson, C. J. Baisden, Paul Toland, E. D. McDonald, of Post B, of Atlanta; J. M. Giddens and Max Banner, of Post C, of Columbus; J. H. Timberlake, of Post D, of Macon; W. B. Barnett, of Post E, of Augusta; C. H. Ficken, of Post G, of Waycross; O. L. Stamps, of Post H, of Rome, and George J. Callaway, of Post K, of Albany. The following also accompanied the party: W. P. Fain, of Atlanta; C. W. Randall, of Macon, and Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Anderson, of Atlanta.

Among the important business matters to come before the convention will be the proposed revision of the constitution and by-laws, presented by a committee named by the national board of directors. Fifty-nine changes in the fundamental laws of the organization will be voted on. The business sessions will continue through six days, and will be interspersed with numerous entertainment features consisting of receptions, sight-seeing trips, theater parties, trips down the James river to Jamestown, and automobile rides, card parties and special receptions for the visiting ladies.

On Sunday night, June 8, there will be lay services in the T. P. A.'s at the Second Baptist church of Richmond, conducted by George H. Armstrong, a prominent T. P. A. of Philadelphia. Special music will be furnished by the T. P. A. choir.

On Monday the 1913 convention will be formally opened with a big parade of the delegations, which will be viewed by D. W. Micheaux, national president; the board of natfonal directors, Governor W. H. Mann, of Virginia, and Mayor George Ainslie, of Richmond. Following this the first business session will take place, and the convention will be in full swing.

St. Louis, Mo., and Houston, Tex., are contending for the 1914 meeting of the association, and the fight between these cities is expected to be both vigorous and spectacular.

George H. Armstrong, of Philadelphia, is generally mentioned as the candidate for the president most likely to be successful. He has been a prominent member of the Pennsylvania delegation for a number of years and is a member of the committee on revising the national constitution and by-laws. He has a strong following, and it is confidently predicted that he will be the next T. P. A. president.

The Georgia delegates yesterday were arrayed with streamers and badges denoting their division membership. The official badge is a handsome design of oxidized silver with the regulation T. P. A. emblem at the top and pendants of a cotton bale and an Elberta peach.

The national membership of the T. P. A. now numbers 45,743, an increase of 4,215 over last year.

SALESMAN SUGARMAN BEGINS HIS SCHOOL SEASON AT TIME WHEN REGULAR PUPILS END THEIRS

Bag, Basket and Tablet Salesmen Are Busy Now Selling Dealers Their Supplies for the Opening of the Fall School Term

Sam Sugarman, of Montag Bros., finished the first week of his school term yesterday.

If he is seen on the streets loaded up in something of the manner shown in the photograph do not jump to the hasty conclusion that he is attending summer school to learn how to properly total up his long orders. He is having "school days" now, but not to learn—instead he is teaching, teaching the dealers what they should have in stock when the real school days start again in September.

Just when the kids are ending their days at the desks and will soon be free to play from morn to night, the city salesmen for the stationery supply houses start the "school season," as they call it, which means perhaps more hard work for them than at any other time of the year.

The usual customers of these salesmen are, of course, the stationers and the druggists. When the time comes for taking orders for school supplies, however, they visit every one of the fifteen hundred or so of grocers in the vicinity of Atlanta, as practically all of them carry some of these articles.

It is not quite so strenuous for the out-of-town part of the sales force, as the travelers' school season work is confined mostly to the usual class of customers—druggists, stationers and general stores.

While the city men are now just starting their specialty work along this line the men of the road are nearly through as the road season on school supplies for fall delivery starts in April, it being possible to persuade the small town merchants to buy further ahead than the ones in the city.

Mr. Sugarman shortens the time necessary for visiting his long list of school supply customers by making the rounds in an automobile.

It is due quite largely to his big volume of sales on school stuff that the Montag factory has to increase its factory force for a period each summer to turn out the hundreds of thousands of tablets which are delivered to the trade in August.

WHATLEY NOW WITH SILVEY-DOUGHERTY CO.

T. J. Whatley is back on the road for the Silvey & Dougherty Hat Co.

He traveled for this same company under its old organization about five years ago in Mississippi. He is an old hand at selling hats to the retailers and is expected to make the company solid in southwest Georgia, which is the territory he will cover for them now.

During the last few years he has been in the retail mercantile business at Malone, Fla., but has now placed his interests there in charge of his brother. He started on his first trip in his new territory Thursday.

CAROLINA U. C. T.'S HOLD MEETING AT SALISBURY

Advocate Revision of Freight Rates and Pulling of Mileage on Trains

(Special Dispatch to The Journal Firing Line.)

SALISBURY, N. C., June 7.—The second and closing day of the seventh annual convention of the United Commercial Travelers for North and South Carolina was a busy one prominent. Among the resolutions adopted was one emphatically endorsing the movement in North Carolina to secure a revision of freight rates on railroads. The convention went on record asking Governor Craig to call an extra session on the legislature rate commission of the state. The convention also passed a resolution urging the legislature to pass a law requiring railroads to redeem mileage on trains. Greenville was unanimously chosen as the place of the next annual convention, June 5 and 6, 1914.

More than three hundred representatives were in attendance from all the councils in the two Carolinas. The visitors were tendered a barbecue at noon today. The afternoon was given to horse racing, base ball and other sports. The officers elected for the coming year cluded C. O. Kuester, Charlotte, grand counseller; E. A. Hughes, of Durham, grand junior counsellor; J. H. Lemken, of Charleston, grand post counsellor; E. B. Littlefield, of Charlotte, grand secretary; delegate to supreme council, C. D. His condition has been further complicated by rheumatism. He is reported better during the last several days, however, and at his present rate of improvement is expected to be out again very soon.

GOOD ADVERTISING AIDS TRAVELING SALESMEN

Ad Man Says Careful Copy Helps but Poor Copy Burdens Sales Force

"Did you ever stop to think how little the average ad writer considers his traveling force when preparing copy and yet how directly it affects them," said Jack W. Evans, advertising manager of the Atlanta Agricultural Works.

"Only a small minority of advertisers employ an expert advertising manager, this work as a rule being done by some one connected with the office force, and if properly handled and carefully studied some mighty good stuff can be produced in this way, but an ad writer for any concern can pick up a lot of good dope by talking the situation over with the traveling force.

"It is a fact not appreciated but deprecated by every traveling salesman that he is daily called on to make good every claim either expressed or implied in every ad run by his house and unless careful study is given to the preparation of copy, the already many trials and tribulations of the traveling salesman is going to be multiplied, whereas the prime object of all advertising is to diminish these troubles and be an assistance to him in booking orders.

"Simple, plain, forceful statements of fact are contained in the vocabulary of every one and these are the only facts which carry weight in advertising. As soon as the average ad writer begins the art of embellishment in his copy, his traveling force can look ahead and see the white capped billows of trouble come rolling toward them with unabated fury and it's going to take up a goodly portion of their valuable time in explaining whereas they should copy, his traveling force can look stantiate advertised facts.

"Possibly the most difficult task that I ever run up against in my experience on the road was the explaining away of an ignorant misrepresentation of facts regarding an article I was then selling. My zeal and enthusiasm led me to the belief that there were unlimited possibilities of merit in this article and when it fell to my lot to prepare copy for an ad on this particular article I put in all the embellishments and frills that my vocabulary was capable of. And the strange thing about it was that my house thought that ad so good that I was immediately deputized to hit the road and reap the harvest in the particular territory where this ad had its widest circulation. That the article possessed merit was then an admitted fact and the subsequent sales and magnificent business that has been built up on it since has proven its merit, but in less than a week out I realized that I had claimed for it everything it would not do and had not touched on a thing that it would do. My rude awakening came in a small town in south Alabama when talking to a merchant who handled this article. He was but poorly educated, but was honest in every word he uttered and believed in my article. I asked him what he thought of it and though his language was simple and terse, the words fell from his lips as the words fell from his lips I drank them in and as I sat in my seat on the train that night and compared his views with what I thought to be my masterpiece of advertising, I realized that I had made an absolute failure in attempting to put over the most miserable piece of 'bunk' that had ever been thrust upon the gaze of an unsuspecting public. Right then I resolved never to depart from the straight and narrow in advertising."

SPASMODIC ADVERTISING.

"Spasmodic or intermittent advertising is another thing which is a great drawback to the traveling force. Once an ad is run the public unconsciously begin to look for it again and when it is discontinued it in some way creates an impression that the advertiser has died, gone out of business or at least it creates an unfavorable impression.

"There are a number of articles on the market today, the manufacturers of which run an ad for a while and then drop it only to take it up again when business gets dull. Such an advertiser is doing both himself and his product an injustice and creating a big bunch of continuous hard work for the traveling men who are trying to sell his goods. In my opinion the true of the heaviest advertising of any product is when trade is the best. This is true in all other things, so why not in advertising. Take any line of sport, baseball for instance (for I'm somewhat of a baseball fan), when the boys are hitting the ball the hardest and making the most runs, isn't that the time we do the most shouting, that's where we rooters get in our heaviest work. Take an article where the advertising is kept up continuous and you can hardly step into a store in any part of the country but what a stock of that article stares you in the face and where it has become a household necessity. There are many articles today which possess but little merit which are building fortunes for their manufacturers solely because of the fact that they are so well advertised that the public demand them from intuition. And the salesmen handling such articles realize and appreciate the ease with which they are able to book the orders.

"The American public, as a rule, is an art loving people and an illustrated ad, preferably illustrated with an action picture, will attract attention and produce results many fold more than a plain type ad.

"I once asked a manufacturer who sold his goods exclusively through the jobbers if he wasn't losing money by his continuance of a certain ad. His reply was forceful. 'My boy,' he said, 'I have never in my entire career seen a single direct result from my advertising, but I do know that my business is increasing every year and the boys on the road tell me that my line is easier to sell than anything they carry. No, I am not losing money by continuing my advertising, but I know that I would suffer untold loss by discontinuing it. What helps the jobbers' salesmen to sell the goods, of course, is bound to help me. And when you take into consideration the fact that for a ten-dollar bill I can reach every week in the year more buyers than a traveling salesman can call on in six months at practically that much per head, you can readily see where I am so far ahead of the game that its going to take the entire traveling force of all my good jobbing friends to bring in the business my advertising is continuously creating for them.

"This advertiser has been and is still carrying some mighty good advertising, the kind with a pull to it, and I have often heard salesmen for competing manufacturers admit that it was a hard proposition to buck up against the kind of arguments he puts forth for his goods.

"Not all advertisers are successful, but it is a notable fact that pretty near all successful houses are good advertisers and that they put forth their best efforts in advertising in such a way as to lighten the already heavy load carried by the traveling force."

or more to his credit. Last week, however, he broke the sales speed limit by placing three opening bills. The orders were sold to the Crescent Mercantile company, of Hampton, Ga.; Fletcher & Chapman, of Forsyth, Ga., and Pearcat Brothers, of Decatur Ga. The McClue company also had an opening at Cartersville, Ga., yesterday. C. P. Bailey is the new ten cent merchant there.

The McClure company is experiencing a rapid growth, of which, the new openings all over the southeast constitute striking evidence.

DOBBS & WEY FORCE PLAN FISHING TRIP

The bunch of salesmen at the Dobbs & Wey Co. are planning to prove now that they are as good fishermen as they are salesmen.

At an entertainment given his brother salesmen and members of the house force by E. E. Fulton at his home a few nights ago there was a round of fish stories told that showed their talk along that line is certainly as strong as their selling talk, though it is hoped the latter is more accurate than the former.

The fishing stories led to the fishing trip plans. The details have not yet been arranged, but the entire sales force are helping with suggestions and there will surely be a fishing trip whether there are any caught or not.

J. J. Eley, with the Dixie Pickle and Preserving company, spent last week on the road with J. E. Almand, of the E. L. Adams company. Both had a successful business.

"THE BEST SALESMAN," AS SEEN BY AN OLD RETAILER

Robinson Tells of Qualities That Bring Lasting Success in Salesmanship

L. B. Robinson, who will be remembered by countless numbers of the old guard on the road because of his fifteen years on the firing line for the A. M. Robinson company, has given us a word picture of the best salesman he knows.

For many years in the retail mercantile business himself, and visited by hundreds of salesmen, Mr. Robinson's description of "the best salesman who sold him goods" is doubly interesting because of his long experience on both sides of the firing line. The salesman's name is omitted, but he is a dry goods salesman who made regular calls on Mr. Robinson for years.

Says Mr. Robinson:

"First of all, he is strictly business. I don't mean that he is brusque or grave in manner, but when he calls on a merchant he makes it very clear that he is there to sell goods and not to talk politics or tell a long string of jokes. He has easy and rather courtly manners, and jokes when the moment is opportune, but he loses no time in getting along with the business of showing his samples and taking your order.

"When he calls on a merchant he makes a definite engagement as to when the merchant will visit his sample room and then expects the merchant to be right there. If he is not, this salesman does not wait around for him but goes and looks him up and demands to know why, as a business man, he does not keep his appointments with another business man.

"When his customer is in the sample room and ready to go over the line this salesman shows him right through his samples in a way quicker and more effective than any other of hundreds of salesman I have had show me their line.

"It is hard to describe just how he does it. For one thing, he talks little as he shows the samples. He moves along rather quickly from one thing to another. He calls attention briefly but pointedly to the leading features. When the merchant doesn't promptly show some sign of wanting a certain article, the salesman moves right on to the next instead of still pounding on the article not wanted. He keeps the customer in a good humor every minute largely by respecting his opinions and desires instead of trying to convince him against his will. He shows things carefully and not hurriedly but he doesn't waste a minute.

"He impresses on his customers that to serve their interests is to serve his own and he does this in his dealings with them as well as in plain words.

"His leading characteristic is his supreme self confidence. He walks into the store with the bearing of a Chesterfield. He is never flamboyant but he seems to never doubt for an instant that he is going to sell a big bill.

"This is about as well as I can describe this salesman. My observation of successful salesmen as a class is that they are the men who stick right to the text "Sell the Goods" and waste as little time as possible in general talk with the trade. I think most salesmen waste too much time in jollying the trade along."

REEDER WANTS TO GET ATLANTA SPIRIT

Editor Firing Line:

W. J. Reeder, for many years with Leonard McGhee, of Dalton, Ga., has recently connected himself with the Atlanta branch of the Baldwin Piano company.

The Baldwin people recently rented commodious quarters on West Alabama street. Mr. Reeder is a business man of wide experience in Georgia, North Carolina and Tennessee.

"I want to catch the Atlanta spirit," said Mr. Reeder as he filed his application with the Georgia Travelers' association, "as my duties will be mostly on the road and I must keep up."

Very truly yours,

C. J. HOLLINGSWORTH.

TRAVELING LIFE IN FLORIDA

Hard is the life of the traveling man,
Built on a rough and tiresome plan.

Darn poor grub and hard old beds,
Not a one bit like the Newlyweds.

Some may think we are a jolly lot,
But let me say that's all blamed rot.

We sometimes put up an awful bluff
And folks think we are some hot stuff.

That's only done, though, to drive away cares,
For we haven't a darn bit of joy to spare.

Just allow me to mention one or two things
Which show how hollow the whole thing rings.

Aside from the grub, most always rotten,

And the rocky beds must not be forgotten,

Are the dinky little towns with one train a day
When you hate like h-ll to have an hour to stay.

But stay there you must and add to your woe,
Sit up till twelve or one in order to go.

Say, isn't that the limit? Well, I guess yes,
I've said quite enough so I will digress.

Enough has been told to make a saint ween,
So I'll turn around again and try and go to sleep.

SAY WHEN!

In some sections of the West the rainfall is mighty unaccommodating to the farmers. For six months it will rain nearly every day, and then will come another six months without a drop.

Only by means of costly irrigation can they raise a crop.

Their soil is, in itself, above the average in fertility. Their total rainfall during a year is ample, but the trouble is they DON'T GET IT WHEN THEY NEED IT.

Now, some merchants have that same trouble in regard to their stock of shoes.

They put a lot of money into shoes every year. They may get good shoes too, but they don't make as much money as they ought.

Why?

The Red Seal Shoe Factory, right here in Georgia, has solved this problem for thousands of the South's best merchants.

A half million dollar stock of the very newest styles is at your service. Why not use it?

It will mean for you quick shipments—low freights—a bigger shoe business on a smaller stock, better kept.

Red Seal Shoes are the best known and best spoken of line in the South today.

ROAD REMINISCENCE

Tales of adventure along the way told by Atlanta Travelers

The Rewards of Enthusiasm

"From my long experience on the road," said an old traveler, "I have found out that the successful salesman must learn that there is no such word as 'can't.' I may say that there is such a word, but it is fit only for use by sissies and incompetents. Real salesmen banish it from their thoughts. The seemingly impossible needs but the application of common sense and enthusiasm for its solution.

"I might discourse at great length on enthusiasm, for I consider it one of the indispensable qualities of a successful sales career. It sweeps the cobwebs of indifference and laziness from the brain. It gives the salesman compelling power. It overrides obstacles with ease, obstacles that would effectually bar the progress of the faint-hearted. It is what serves to unite the hard knots of salesmanship. It is what brings success and promotion.

"I haven't had a call for your stores," he said.

"It leads its possessors instinctively to employ the right method with each particular customer. It hurries him safely across the pitfalls that beset those less in earnest.

"I had been traveling a number of years for a range company, when I called on a dealer in one of the large cities of the south and persuaded him after much effort to take on our line. Too high-priced, I am afraid I'll never sell any, of them,' was his objection.

"I advertised in the newspapers of the city the merits of our ranges and stated that they were to be seen at the merchant's store. I was present one day when he received a caller in response to my advertisement.

"'I want to look at those ranges,' said the visitor, who was a prominent real estate dealer. 'I am dissatisfied with the one I have and would like to see what you've got.'

"'Well, I'll show it to you,' said the merchant, half-heartedly, 'but it's a $65 range and I don't know whether you want to pay that much.'

"'You're dead right about that,' replied the inquirer, as I ground my teeth in rage at the poor salesmanship the merchant was showing. 'Why, I paid $35 for my old one and considered that a big price. I guess it's no use in my looking at your range at that price, but I'll call up my wife and see what she thinks about it.'

"He went to the telephone and called his residence. Fortunately his wife was not at home. If she had been, all chance of a sale would have been gone, for she would have heard nothing about my range except $65. The merchant had put that uppermost in the mind of the prospective buyer and it would still be uppermost in his mind when he talked to his wife.

"'Well, see what your wife says,' said the merchant, 'and come back tomorrow.'

"Still raging inwardly, I stopped the man at the door and introduced myself. 'You know the real estate business,' I said, 'and I don't. I know all about stoves and you don't. Come right back with me and let me show why my range is worth every cent you pay for it.'

"Without giving him time to object I led him to the department where our stoves were on display. I knew if he left the store then he would never return; that the merchant had in effect killed a very fine prospect.

"I then showed the fine points of my line, the steel lids and unbreakable doors, the double lining for retaining the heat, the equal distribution of the heat and the saving of fuel that would result. I let loose all my enthusiasm, I soon had him interested. He went over with me again each point I had made, and then he said:

"'This is the very range I've been looking for. It avoids all the weakness that caused so much trouble in my old days. I'll cheerfully pay you the $65 and am thoroughly convinced that it is not too much.'

"He wrote out a check and left an order that the range be delivered to him

"He went to the telephone and called his residence."

next day. I turned the order and check over to the merchant who was surprised beyond measure.

"'Why, I never did think you would be able to sell him.'

"'I never would,' I replied, 'if I had gone about it as you did.

"On another occasion I was trying to get a merchant in a small Georgia town to handle my ranges. As in the case of the former merchant his excuse was, 'Your prices are too high.'

"'Why, I haven't sold a range in six months,' he said gloomily, 'and I have some good ones in stock too, and the prices are less than what yours cost.'

"His bland assumption that my goods couldn't be sold nettled me to anger as it always does.

"'I'll tell you what I'll do, I replied. 'If you'll take six of my ranges, I'll sell two of them for you before noon today.'

"'Let's see you do it,' he said. 'I don't believe you could give them any ranges in this community right now.'

"It so happened that I had two nephews living in the town whom I had not seen for some time. I called on them, showed them my ranges and told them what my agreement with the merchant was.

"One in fact did need a new range and the other who had just bought a new one from my merchant friend was anything but pleased with it. Some of the door hinges had already become broken and the flues were not working well.

"'In order to get them to give me the order immediately, I promised them a reduction in price of $10 each, a rebate that came out of my own pocket, by the way.

"'I got their orders and was back at the merchant's before 11 o'clock.

"'Why, I just sold one of those fellows a stove a month ago,' he said.

"'Yes,' I replied, 'but I just sold him one of mine ten minutes ago.'

"'I shipped the merchant the six stoves according to our agreement and about a month later dropped in to see him. He had delivered the two stoves I had sold, but the four additional ones were still on his hands. I had expected nothing else.'

"He was very much disturbed.

"'I haven't had a call for your stoves,' he said, 'and I think I'm stuck on them, good and proper.'

"'Waiting for some one to call?' said I. 'You never will sell anything that way. You've got to hustle for it. You tell me you can't sell my range for $65 when the men who travel through the country in wagons are selling all around you stoves that are inferior to mine for $80. I'll have to show you how it's done.

"'I arranged a demonstration at his store the next week and before it was over sold the four stoves he had on hand and sixteen others. In addition, to making a number of sales for him on the cheaper lines which he carried.

"He was greatly delighted and I got a letter not long afterward wanting another demonstration right away. But here again his salesmanship was at fault. It was too early for another sales effect. I advised him to wait several months and then get testimonials from all his purchasers as to service given by the ranges. He would then be able to refer prospective customers to actual customers to substantiate his claims of the superiority of the ranges. He followed this plan and has now become one of the largest handlers of our product in the entire state.

"'Accurate knowledge coupled with enthusiasm turned the seemingly impossible into the easily possible in this case. My claim is that it will do it in every case. I have never yet seen the combination fail."

WHALEY IN HIS MIDDY---HAVE A CARE FOR SHE'S A BEAR, SHE'S A BEAR

C. L. Whaley, of the Ridley-Williamson-Wyatt company, arrayed in some of the feminine apparel which he sells.

Young House Salesman Has Big Sales on the Popular Middy Blouse—He Also Sells Boudoir Caps, Aprons, and Parasols as Efficiently as He Can Wear Them, as Shown in the Picture, Only With Nerve Enough for the Demonstration

Let us tell his real name right now; it is C. L. Whaley and not Julian Eltinge, the vaudeville female impersonator. But if he, the former, were let loose in public in this disguise that he donned in the Ridley-Williamson-Wyatt Co. stock rooms he would undoubtedly create more of a sensation than the latter ever did with his clever vaudevillic act.

But as to the way of this attire of the house salesman. It started with talk of the middy blouse fad and how it has been keeping the dry goods wholesalers on the jump to get enough of the Balkan style affairs to supply the demand. The Ridley-Williamson-Wyatt Co. are selling them as fast as three factories can ship them out.

Someone had the idea that the fad is furious enough to extend to men's wear. It was argued that this could not be. There is only one way to settle such points and that is by demonstration. So, then it was decided someone must demonstrate. But when it came to getting the demonstrator there was trouble. W. J. Hays, of the sales force, was chosen. It took him two days to decide to play the model and then five minutes to get cold feet and pass it up. C. S. Shiflett, city salesman, did not have the courage to even consider playing the role and proving the point.

It remained for the house salesman to show that of all the Ridley-Williamson-Wyatt outfit, he was the one to settle the question of how far the Balkan middy style might go.

And here is the demonstration for the verdict of the public. The rest of the fittings—the cap, parasol and apron were added in the hope that his friends might not penetrate the disguise, but it is no go. It is plain that it is really C. L. W. of R.-W.-W. And it is also quite plain—beyond any reasonable doubt, as the court terms have it—that there will be no Balkan middy style in skirts.

Mr. Whaley is thoroughly conversant with all the style points of the articles in which he appears and, as salesman has been handling large quantities of all the lines represented.

SALES MANAGER HOLT PARADING AND SELLING

C. P. Holt, sales manager, and J. M. Harrison, secretary and treasurer, of the Dixie Pickling and Preserving company, were in the mammoth grocers' parade of last Wednesday with a big Pope-Hartford truck, well decorated and carrying a number of the company's sales and office force.

It was a big week for Sales Manager Holt in other directions also. He closed a deal for a carload shipment to Augusta, which will go out next week. He is still securing the carload orders about as fast as Mr. Hancock, who looks after the manufacturing end of the business, can deliver the goods.

SAMPLES AND SHIPMENTS

A. W. Darden, formerly of Atlanta, but now of Montgomery, Ala., traveler for the P. Lorillard Tobacco company, is having a fine sales record. He led the entire sales force of his company in the United States recently for two successive weeks.

The "ins" at the J. D. Frazier company yesterday were A. H. Steedman and J. D. O'Rear. Mr. O'Rear was ill a part of the week and was unable to see some of his customers. G. H. Hagan, specialty salesman of mixed feeds, is on a trip to Alabama.

W. M. Darden, hosiery salesman, has returned from a three months' sales trip as far west as Arkansas and as far north as Illinois. His trip was most successful. He leaves today for New Orleans on another extensive trip, finishing his fall business.

W. P. Price, of the E. L. Adams company, lost his automobile last Wednesday on the day of the parade. He hunted till 10 o'clock at night before he was able to locate it.

In the first automobile of the grocers and butchers' parade Wednesday, with Mayor Woodward, were J. G. Rainey, H. L. Simmons, W. A. Quarles and J. P. Eve, representatives of the City Salesmen's association.

BRISK BUGGY BUSINESS EXPECTED THIS FALL

P. J. Zippelmann, who came to Atlanta during the last year to take charge of the manufacturing end of the big East Point concern, talks optimistically of conditions in their line.

He believes the improvement in conditions which have been noticeable during the last several weeks will be little in comparison to the jump in demand which is expected within a few months.

ON THE FIRING LINE WITH THE COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS

WITH SOUTHERN RETAILERS

It is understood that F. L. McMahan, of Tallapoosa, Ga., whose store recently burned, will re-establish at that place as soon as he can arrange for a suitable location.

W. J. Franklin, who has been in the mercantile business at Zebulon, Ga., for many years, has increased his stock and improved his store a great deal during the last year. He has long been regarded as one of the county's substantial merchants and is being talked of now for his progressive ideas.

E. M. Rudisill, general merchant of Canton, Ga., attended the Confederate reunion at Chattanooga last week.

C. L. McPherson, of Temple, Ga., according to J. E. Almand, of the E. L. Adams company, is doing an excellent business in heavy groceries and feed stuffs, selling to a wide territory around Temple.

E. L. Smith, of Etheridge, Smith & Co., of Jackson, Ga., was a visitor at the E. L. Adams company last week.

Ben Roan, of the C. G. Mozeley company, of Palmetto, Ga., has acquired a new Cadillac automobile. Business is evidently good with this hustling firm.

C. R. Haines, of Sharpsburg, Ga., was a visitor at the Confederate reunion at Chattanooga. "He had about recovered from his trip when I saw him last week," said P. S. Brownlee, traveler for the E. L. Adams company.

J. W. Grady, of Stroud, Ala., who has extensive farming interests as well as a mercantile business at that place, was in Atlanta Friday and called on the Dougherty-Little-Redwine company.

J. H. McGee, of Lawrenceville, Ga., is quoted by an Atlanta traveler to the effect that his cash business during the last two months has been the largest he has ever had. Salesmen who make the town say that Mr. McGee is advertising vigorously and making his store one of the livest in that section.

Clayton Weaver, of Weaver Brothers, the Loganville, Ga., mercantile firm, is putting in his time just now at farming, says J. S. Cheek, of the Ridley-Williamson-Wyatt company, who was there a few days ago.

C. J. Williamson, of the Ridley-Williamson-Wyatt company, who has been on a trip through south Georgia, was impressed particularly with the stores of W. M. Oliver and C. C. Varnadoe company at Valdosta, Ga., as two of the livest mercantile concerns in that section.

Sam Cheek, a Ridley-Williamson-Wyatt company salesman, says he found, when he visited Danielsville, Ga., the other day that his friend, "Red" Mosely, buyer for the L. E. Green company, was at home sick, but not seriously ill. But Mr. Green gave him an order as quick as the buyer ever does, says the dry goods salesman.

J. E. Edmondson, a Palatka, Fla., merchant, was in Atlanta and called at the M. C. Kiser company yesterday.

BIGGEST VEHICLE JOB IS NEARLY COMPLETED

The J. M. Karwisch Wagon works have nearly completed the two big transfer and sightseeing busses for use at the Grove Park Inn at Asheville, N. C., and expect to have them ready for shipment by June 15.

This is the biggest vehicle construction job ever handled in Atlanta. The busses are nearly as large as a trolley car and have a seating capacity of thirty-five persons each.

The bodies are being built at the Karwisch factory and will be placed on Packard truck chassises.

FRANKEL'S SPECIALTY IS GETTING BETWEEN SUN AND SUMMER PORCHES

J. M. Frankel, of the Rosenfeld Company, and His Pet Sales Article.

Shade Salesman Returns From Trip Through Indiana and Kentucky, and Is Now Ready to Tour Georgia, Declares He Will Put His Screens on Piazzas All Over the State

After three months on the road in Kentucky and Indiana pushing his specialty, bamboo porch shades, J. M. Frankel, of the Rosenfeld company, starts Monday to make his attack on the Georgia trade.

Every dealer in furniture, hardware or proprietor of any kind of store that could possibly handle porch shades to advantage, might as well decide now just how many of this summer article he will order and arrange a place to store and exhibit them for when this salesman strikes a merchant for an order on this hobby of his it is a matter of record that he usually gets it.

All salesmen carrying a varied line have their specialties, some article that they push harder than the others. This salesman leads the Rosenfeld company outfit on the sales of this item. On his trip just finished he turned in shade orders even from dry goods stores and one from a carriage dealer.

Mr. Frankel's long experience at selling things covers both ends of the traveling salesman's transaction—buying from them as a retailer himself and for the last ten years on the selling side as a traveler for the Rosenfeld company of which he is an officer and stockholder.

He is a good illustration of the paramount value of self confidence on the firing line of business. He says he can sell anything on which the price is right and holds to the idea that this is true of any salesman who is not in the "order taking" class.

But he had much rather talk about his imported bamboo shades than himself. Says he:

"We are the largest importers of these shades in the south. The sales on them this year through a number of states our company covers are far ahead of any previous year and I am going to have them on porches all over Georgia before the summer is much further along. The prices are low and every home needs them. They are— —"

This quotation had better be ended to prevent it being an advertisement for the Rosenfeld company instead of a story of a salesman and his specialty. But any dealer who lets him get well launched on a talk along this line will find himself buying shades.

CIGARETTE MAKERS NOW IN FIERCE COMPETITION

Dissolution of Trust Put Companies to Bidding Favor of Public

"Few of the public realize the effect the court's verdict dissolving the tobacco trusts has had on the tobacco trade," says E. F. Malone, of the Capitol City Tobacco company, the Atlanta jobbing house.

"Since the government's suit against the American Tobacco company there has been the keenest fight for public favor on cigarettes and pipe tobacco between the four or five largest manufacturers that has ever been known in the tobacco business.

"This is not affecting cigars, as there are so many cigar factories that conditions in that line are now about the same as they have always been.

"Cigarettes are cheaper now, however, than they have been for years. The leading competitors are pushing their favorite brands so hard that in some sections the trade is nearly demoralized. In New York City cigarettes can be bought cheaper at retail than at wholesale in some other parts of the country.

"The competition is strongest perhaps in the metropolitan district, but all over the country smokers are getting better values than they have for years. There are 5-cent cigarettes on the market that compare favorably with the quality of the 10-cent brands a year ago, to say nothing of the cash coupons the manufacturers are loading the boxes with.

"The government spent a large sum in bringing about the dissolution of the American Tobacco company, and it looks like they secured some good results. The average man hardly appreciates the change, but a little observation will show it is very marked.

ATLANTA CREDIT MEN TO ATTEND NAT. MEETING

Representative Smith to Be Guest at Next Luncheon and Deliver Address

A large delegation from the Atlanta Association of credit men will attend the convention of the national association in Cincinnati on June 17. The party will consist of E. L. Adams, president; H. T. Moore, secretary; Bolling H. Jones, E. S. Papy, Ralph Rosenbaum, L. E. Floyd, C. V. Logan, S. Freitag, Sam Boykin, H. A. Ferris. Among the importance things to be discussed is the revision of the currency system of the United States.

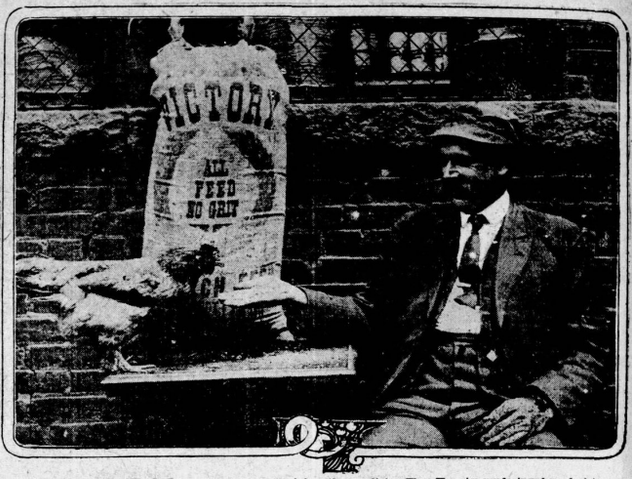
The Atlanta association has shown a rigorous growth in the past year and now the slogan is, "250 members by the end of the present fiscal year."

At the Wednesday noonday luncheon last week the association was addressed by Dr. A. M. Hewlett, pastor of St. Mark's Methodist church on the subject of subduing and developing the earth. On next Wednesday, the association will have as its guest, Hon. John Y. Smith, representative elect to the Georgia legislature. He will discuss the proposed amendments to the collection laws.

BARNES NOW HEAD OF NEW DRY CLEANING CO.

J. J. Barnes, Jr., formerly manager of the Atlanta branch of the National Biscuit company, has gone into business for himself. He is head of the Oriental Dry Cleaning company and has an up-to-date, fully equipped plant at 85 James street. Mr. Barnes began business just about a week ago, but is already enjoying a large patronage. He states that he is prepared to do all sorts of dry cleaning, pressing, altering and repairing. Mr. Barnes was formerly on the road for eleven years and is widely known by the traveling men in Atlanta and Georgia.

SALESMAN AND FANCIER GETS THE VERDICT OF HEN ON MERITS OF HIS SCRATCH FEED



J. L. Estes, of the W. S. Duncan company, receiving the verdict. The Hen is rendering her decision just after having taken copious swallows of the feed spread for her by Mr. Estes.

He Finds Verdict Favorable and Unanimous and Then Goes Forth and Makes Record Sales on This Specialty Product Manufactured by His Company

There are special seasons in every line of trade.

With the grain dealers it is the season for specializing on chicken feed. Every salesman with the big grain concern, W. S. Duncan company, is "talking Scratch feed so enthusiastically now that they are all liable to be taken for chicken fanciers.

J. L. Estes, the well known city salesman of this company, is something of a chicken fancier as well as a fancy chicken feed salesman. But he is devoting his attention now mostly to the latter and is selling the Duncan company's Victory brand of this article in such quantities that he is running a close second to C. D. Farill, who leads all the Duncan men on this important part of their line.

The Duncan company's experience with high class chicken feed shows that the people who raise chickens are fast learning that it is as important that chickens have a well selected diet as that human beings do.

The feed of which the Duncan salesmen are showing samples consists of wheat, cracked corn, sunflower seed, Kaffir corn, milo maize and oats in well balanced proportions and they claim if her ladyship, the hen, will not thrive and lay regularly on these rations she might as well be made into a stew at once.

It is cheating the hen not to give her such a diet, say the salesmen, and they are convincing their customers of this so well that the company's sales on this part of their line are larger than ever before.

The grain dealers in general are all finding the demand growing for the high class chicken feeds and less demand for the cheaper feeds consisting largely of screenings and corn bran.

What is a Real Business Man?
Why, he's the fellow that's right on the job day and night, looking after the leaks; getting ready for a rainy day; keeping the resources well within a safe limit; guarding the credit of the house; reaching out after new business. He's a regular conserver. He's a good man to pattern after—no difference what you undertake. He's the man, that's sensible enough to apply business methods to his personal health. When is eyes begin to annoy him—give out easily, strain and will not permit him to do continuous, close work without unnecessary fatigue, he gets busy—has an examination made and gets glasses. That's simply good business. Suffice to say we've been fitting glasses for the southern people for fifty years, and—well, that's sufficient for a real business man to know.

R. A. Hawkins, of Woodstock, north Georgia traveler for the E. L. Adams company, was a visitor at headquarters yesterday.

The "ins" at Fain & Stamps yesterday were W. Y. Bailey, Cliff Edwards, W. T. Duncan and S. E. Smith.

The officials and city men of the New South Bakery are having to learn another arrangement of lines of their city routing map now. The rapid growth of the Tip-Top bread sales is making frequent changes of routing necessary to cover the city delivery proposition. Their records for May show an increased output of 1,500 loaves a day over April. It doesn't take any one in the bread business to see that this is quite a jump in sales.

J. C. Maisby, of the Malsby company, left Friday for a several days' trip in Tennessee.

N. P. Edge, who carries a sample case for the Atlanta Paper company, was here for a short visit the last of the week.

Sam Saltzman, with the Hirshberg company, has been out in the western section of North Carolina for the last week—out where the fishing is good, but there is evidence at the company's office that he has been fishing for orders rather than trout.

J. M. Hawkins, of LaGrange, Ga., is a W. O. Stamps was absent from his office yesterday attending a meeting of the city board of education.

J. M. Frix, who covers north Georgia for the Lamar & Rankin Drug company, has chucked aside his order book and is off for a motor car trip through Georgia and Florida. He and his party left Atlanta last Monday for Jacksonville and will go as far south as St. Augustine. Ills is one of the first salesman this summer to answer the call of the road, the real, clear road and not the one of rails. It is expected there will be many more soon doing likewise.

S. P. Smith and E. E. Shyer were the "ins" at the Consolidated Paper company yesterday. Mr. Smith returned from a trip on the Georgia road, and Mr. Shyer from a trip to Columbus.

G. N. Gabriel, of the National Paper company, was a visitor Saturday at the Consolidated Paper company.

W. Y. Bailey, of Fain & Stamps, was unable to make his round of customers at Cedartown last week on account of a wreck on the Seaboard railway.

Lynn Fort, manager of the Lamar & Rankin Drug company, is at his home, ill with typhoid fever.

W. H. Stents, manager of the branch in Atlanta of the John Deere Plow company, left several days ago for Moline, Ill., where he went to attend a meeting of all the branch managers of the company.

W. H. Hebbard, with the Malsby company, has been spending several days after business in the vicinity of Madison, Ga.

W. H. Eckford, the M. C. Kiser company Mississippi traveler, who is in Atlanta for a few days, says it indeed feels natural to be back on the road again selling the Shield brand. Mr. Eckford is an old Kiser salesman who recently returned to the company.

Salesmen of the Atlanta Casket company who are spending Sunday in Atlanta are J. W. Murphy, J. A. Cook, and F. M. Catlett.

B. S. Mattingly, who sells shoes for the Gramling-Spalding Shoe company, is in from north Georgia for the week end. Though his territory is a nearby one this is his first visit here for over a month.

It was Atlanta week with the salesmen of the Dixie Pickle and Preserving Works. S. E. Baylis, R. W. Johnson and "Dad" Eley have all been scouring for business in the vicinity of Atlanta for the last six days. This company's salesmen are working in a body as a sort of flying wedge and their work is resulting in carload orders from the jobbers handling their company's goods.

C. B. Lucas, formerly of Atlanta, traffic manager of the Y. M. & W. railway, has been appointed vestryman of Christ's Episcopal church at Valdosta, by Bishop F. F. Reese, of Savannah.

J. L. Shipp, manager of the branch in Atlanta of Robert M. Green & Sons, of Philadelphia, is off Monday for several days of fishing and a visit to his old home at Washington, Ga. He then goes to Philadelphia via Savannah to visit the firm's headquarters.

W. C. Tennant, who stirs things up along the road for the Hirshberg company, after some time spent working in the vicinity of Valdosta, has left that peach section and gone down where the watermelons grow, in far south Georgia. He always likes to be conspicuously among those present when the first watermelons of the season get the knife.

J. L. Williams, Rice & Hutchins' traveler in Florida, landed a big opening bill down near the jumping off point last week. The order is from Fort Myers, Fla. This salesman is reported by his house as having the best season he has ever had.

C. R. Hardy, president of the Rock Falls Manufacturing company, of Sterling, Ill., came on a special visit last week to see W. M. Jenkins, the Atlanta salesman for his company, who is ill at his home at 187 Gordon street.

T. L. Barron was in Friday for a visit to his house, the Dougherty-Little-Redwine company.

W. F. Seay and P. S. Brownlee went fishing Friday near Wooster, Ga. They claim that they had right good luck. It rained hard during their drive of eight miles back to town, but it is understood they took all possible precautions, both external and internal, against catching cold.

A. M. Robinson company received an order from one of the large retail concerns at far off Galveston, Tex., the other day for 150 dozen of their make of shirts. This is not unusual for good quality Atlanta-made goods, though this order is a big one and goes considerable distance from the usual Atlanta territory.

F. W. Webb, the traveler for the Ridley-Williamson-Wyatt company, is spending Sunday with his parents at Kestler, Ga. He has had a good week on the road.

H. M. Walker and his brother, C. J. Walker, both of whom are with Brown, Ferryman & Greene Co., put in three days together calling on the trade in South Carolina last week and the former is now convinced that his younger brother has the makings of a salesman that will do credit to the Walker family.

Louis Barrow, W. P. Sewell and Chris Irby were A. M. Robinson company travelers who ranked up high in amount of goods sold for the week just ended.

C. L. Williamson, of the Ridley-Williamson-Wyatt company, is just back from two weeks on the road through south Georgia and talks encouragingly of the outlook there. He says the prospects are especially good for a fine corn crop. His trip was spent mostly in calling on the larger stores.

R. J. Bates, of the J. K. Orr Shoe Co., sales force, is now on his vacation. He and Mrs. Bates will spend several weeks in New York.

A. C. McKennon, who travels the Selma district for the J. K. Orr Shoe company, and Frank P. Morgan, who covers the Montgomery district, appear to be out to set a pace for all the rest of the Orr travelers, judging from the good business both had last week.

George E. Burnett, who makes headquarters at Montgomery and sells Shield brand shoes for Kiser, is at Savannah and will be there for a week or ten days, visiting relatives and vacationing.

He says crop and trade prospects in his territory look good to him.

Salesmen who are in for the week-end at the Ragan-Malone company are: R. R. Pennington, Dan Tuggle and Sam Hanes. W. M. Johnson was in for a short stay during the week.

William T. Nesbitt and One of th e Delivery Wagons He Designed.

He Is Successful Not Only at Selling Vehicles, but Also at Repairing, Making, and Designing Them—Many of the Wagons Made by His Firm Are From His Designs

On South Forsyth street in the farm implement and wagon section is the wagon wizard. He is with the John Deere Plow company. To be still more specific, he is William T. Nesbitt, cho is house salesman for that company.

If we told just how long he has been handling wagons, either repairing them, making them, selling them, or drawing the specifications for them as he does now, it would be supposed that his early days must have been spent working on the old solid wheeled ox carts.

"Dad" Nesbitt, as they call him around the John Deere building, talks of the civil war days in a vivid way that would indicate he must spend his spare time reading its history if the personal keynote of his stories did not show that they are genuine reminiscences.

Now, his knowledge of wagons goes back about as far as his knowledge of the war but the value of his knowledge of wagons is that he has kept it up to date through all the later years.

Though the wagons sold here by the John Deere company are made at factories in York Pa., a large per cent of them are made directly from specifications drawn in Atlanta by Mr. Nesbitt.

He has been thirteen years on South Forsyth street selling farm implements and wagons, several years with W. J. Dabney and later with the Southern Farm Tool company before that concern sold out to the John Deere company.

Because he is a wagon expert, his knowledge of farm implements should not be considered less thorough. His experience here covers all the stages of buying plows, selling on the road and in the house, and also using them. But it has been a good many years since he followed a plow in a field as that goes back to the period of his wagon repairing days.

When the Deere salesmen are in from a road trip for a visit to the house they get some valuable pointers from the house salesman on fine technical points in the construction of the company's goods.

This company handles about seven different styles of vehicles from light buggies to heavy farm wagons. Mr. Nesbitt has been especially successful in securing large orders for light delivery wagons from a number of leading Atlanta concerns.

DR. VERDIER SETS LIVELY SALES PACE

Dr. W. A. Verdier, of the Liver Ease Medicine company, has been setting a pace for his salesmen lately. He secured eleven orders in one day, which was an order from about every man he called on. The company's four salesmen in Alabama, Tennessee and Virginia are sending in orders at nearly as rapid a rate. This is a rather recent addition to the proprietary medicine business.

WHAT'S DOING WITH U. C. T. COUNCIL 505

Brownlee Writes of Comings and Goings of Members of Live Local

Editor Firing Line:

There will be quite a number of initiates at the meeting night of Council No. 505, as applications for membership continue to be received by the secretary. Every traveling man should belong to the U. C. T. There are many reasons why and if you want to know them, a card of inquiry to any secretary will bring the information.

F. W. Carlisle, Jr., has notified the secretary that he is now located at Nashville, Tenn.

J. W. Currie will be out of the city for a month or more on personal business.

A. R. Tucker, the Armour meat salesman, spent a busy time on the West Point road last week.

All claims of council No. 505 have been passed up and paid, which indicates that all the sick and lame are now back on the firing line.

HERE'S THE WHOLE PLAN
Boiled Down for Easy Understanding

THE JOURNAL is putting on the most interesting campaign in its history. It is A BOOKLOVERS' CAMPAIGN and it is open to every resident of Georgia, Alabama, Florida, North Carolina and South Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Every day, beginning Sunday, April 6th, THE JOURNAL will print a picture and a coupon.

The picture will represent the name of a book. The coupon will contain blank spaces for the name of the book, the name of the author, and the name and address of the contestant.

There will be SEVENTY-FIVE of these pictures and coupons. One will appear every day, including Sundays, for seventy-five consecutive days.

The contestant has only this to do:

Be sure to secure the complete set of pictures and coupons. Cut them from THE JOURNAL as they appear from day to day and save them until all the Seventy-five have appeared. No answers are to be sent in until the last coupon has appeared.

Fill in the blank spaces on the coupon with the name and author of the book you believe the picture to represent. Keep them all until the campaign has closed. Then send them in as directed.

This is a campaign that will give pleasure to every member of the family. You don't have to be the possessor of a college education to be successful in fitting the names of the pictures, and books together. You simply have to study the pictures, use your wits, select the answer you think most appropriate and keep at it until you have named all the seventy-five. It will really be lots of fun. Get suggestions from your friends. Get into the spirit of the game and you'll be amazed at the good time you will have.

Remember: This is a FREE CAMPAIGN. You don't have to enroll your name. You don't have to subscribe. You don't have to solicit subscriptions. You don't have to advertise. There are no strings whatever tied to the prizes. It is a campaign of perfect fairness and openness and it's going to be a great big thing.

LOOK AT THE PRIZES. READ THE RULES. GET BUSY.

The Pictures for This Booklovers' Campaign Are Made in This Way

Three members of The Journal's staff, one of whom is the Booklovers' Campaign Editor, are charged with the responsible duty of selecting the titles to be represented.

None of the three men knows what titles the others have selected. Each knows only his own titles. Only the General Manager knows all of them, for he must review the titles and the pictures, see that there is no duplication of the titles selected, and make sure that the pictures clearly and plainly and fairly represent the titles.

Now the descriptions of the pictures to be drawn to represent the titles are turned over to The Journal's Art Department. Each description is numbered to correspond with the number of the title filed away with the General Manager.

For example: The artist is told to draw a picture of a crowded street at noonday at Five Points. An officer is directing the streams of people and vehicles.

The title is not given the artist. Just a word description of the man's idea of what the picture should be to represent the book he has in mind.

The description above applies to the book entitled "Traffic," by E. Temple Thurston.

The artist does not know what title he is representing in his drawing. He draws to order, according to the written instructions given him. The picture is then passed upon by the man who selected the title to be represented. If the picture does not quite fit the title, or if it is faulty in any way, it is changed until it fits the title perfectly.

WHY EVERYBODY'S DANCING

MISS IDELIA ANDREW

MISS JANE COOPER AND MR EUGENE V. HAYNES

MISS NELL SUMMERALL

DANCING once was as popular as chess; now, it surpasses auction bridge.

The dancing teachers of Atlanta have established studios and are "giving" technique. The art itself has experienced a renaissance.

Dancing has become a healthful, recreative, and artistic pastime. All ages, from the young to the autumnal, are enjoying it.

The fad is no longer a fad, but has become the development of an art. Everyone is dancing, and never does everyone take to the same fad. Here and everywhere, dancing has become the chief avocation. One-steps are as important now as French pronunciation was formerly.

The popularity that began in Paris and New York has reached here along with the fashions. But it is a spontaneous enjoyment, while fashions are sometimes an uncomfortable adaptation.

Dancing has become a pleasure to which the whole world is taking. Atlanta is neither forward or lagging. In all other cities, equally as much as in this one, dancing has become a chief pastime and a subject of study. It is quite an avocation.

Dancing studios and dancing technique are becoming as important a part of art as water color drawings or modeling in clay.

THE RENAISSANCE OF DANCING.

People are dancing now who never danced before. But neither the studios nor the technique are the cause. They are rather the result, and the renaissance of dancing is the reason why.

The revival has been so complete that whoever doesn't dance is more or less exceptional. In the opinion of the teachers they are robbed of an enjoyment of art.

As either preliminary or supplemental to the studios, clubs have been formed to perfect the intricacies of the steps; dancing has become as popular as tea for the afternoon; dancing has become the pastime for the evening.

The world seems to have decided that dancing is the way to remain young and forget cares. And why?

The teachers who study the new art, explain the renaissance by the new forms of expression. Their opinion is that the new dances have revived interest.

The tango is the particular phase of art which they think has set the world to dancing. But they make a great difference between the tango and such upstarts as turkey trots, bunny hugs, and Gabby glides.

In their opinion, the tango and the one-step are technically sound and have a grace and an art of expression that have revived dancing. But the other steps with the fantastic names are considered as devoid of "technique" and all other excellent qualities. The teachers also say that the waltz and the two-step have grown archaic and never again will be danced.

THE PROGRESS OF DANCING.

Their sincere opinion seems to be that the tango and one-step have caused such progress in dancing that a declining art not only has been revived, but also has become popular.

They venture to say that the new dances which have "technique" are as much an improvement over the old dances, as waltzes and two-steps were over the square dances of long ago.

Miss L. V. Moseley, of Atlanta, says of the renaissance of dancing:

"I predict that dancing will sooner or later become the chief amusement. This will prove true because men and women are growing truer and more genuine. The combining of two of the most beautiful arts—music and dancing, the rhythm of mind and body cannot be surpassed.

"There is absolutely no place, even the church social gatherings, where the atmosphere is as free from gossip as the ballroom.

"The most artistic dancing known to the world, and that which is considered the highest and most beneficial form of physical culture is the Imperial Russian ballet style. This was introduced first in this country by the normal school of New York.

"The Russian method includes classical, interpretative, symbolical, aesthetic and imitative dancing. These bring into play every faculty of the mind and the body.

"This style of dancing is based on a thorough technical training. France was the first country to have a school for ballet, Italy second, and Russia third; but the Russian school is best.

EXPRESSION OF BEAUTY AND JOY.

"Dancing, with graceful motion of the entire body, is nature's own method of expressing the love of beauty and the joy of life. When I speak of the motion of the body I mean the soft, natural swaying that comes without effort, as though the dancer were being moved by a summer breeze.

"This style of dancing is recognized by the world's highest authorities as correct, and undoubtedly was introduced to this country by the coming of the Russian dancers.

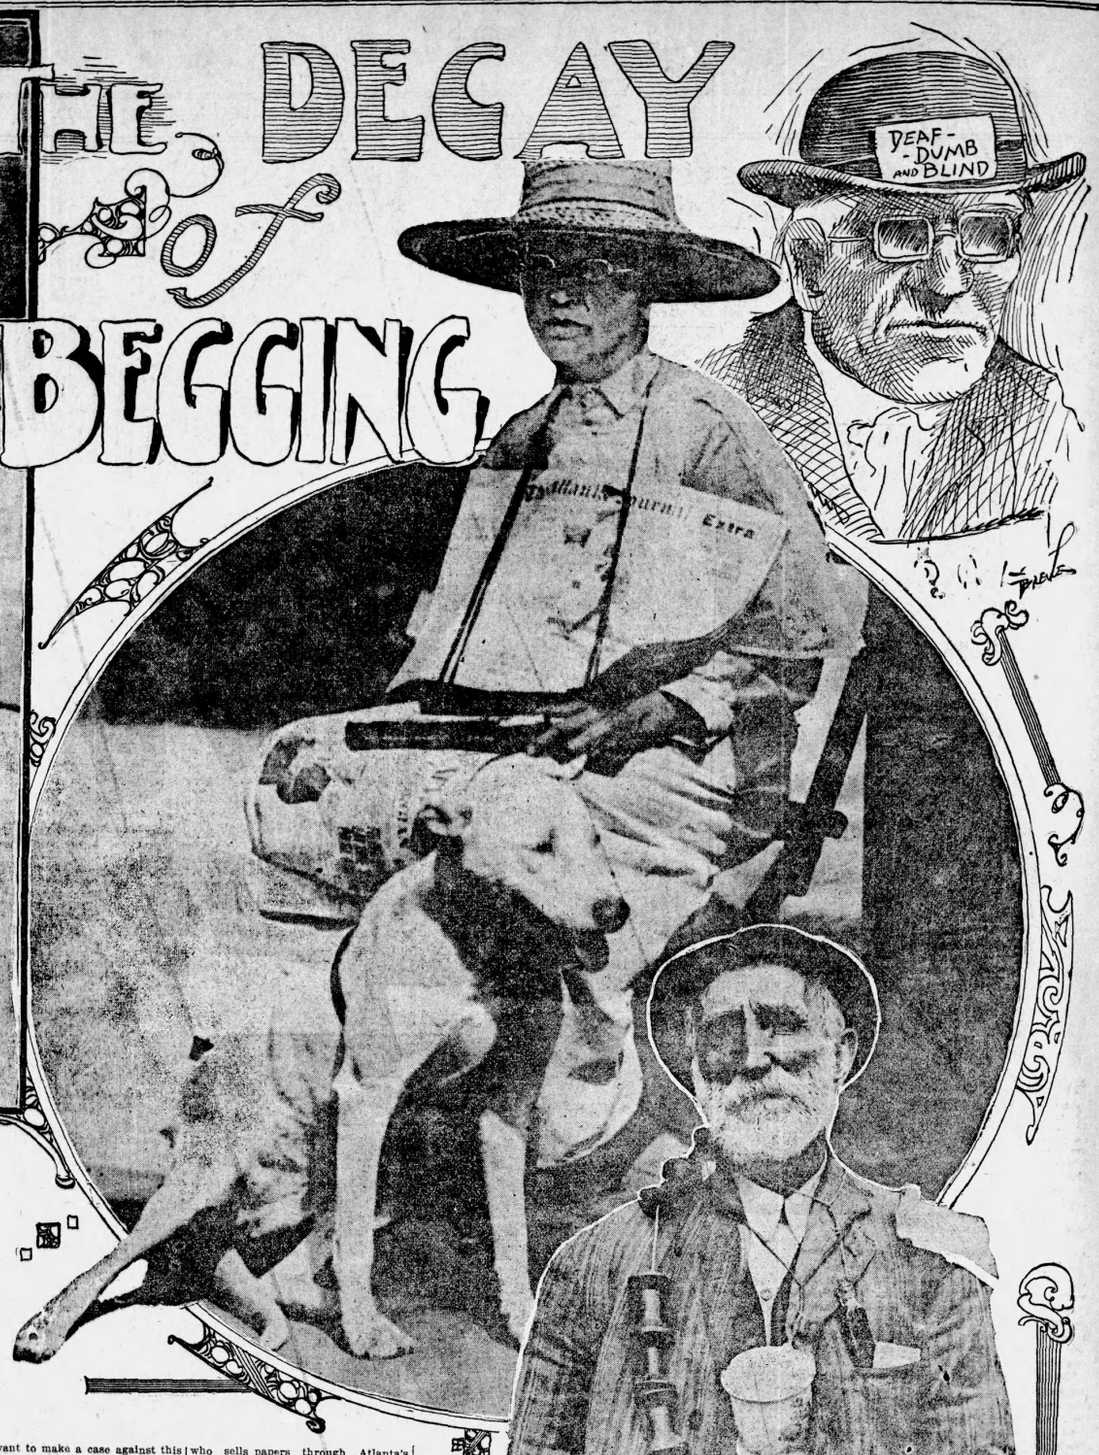
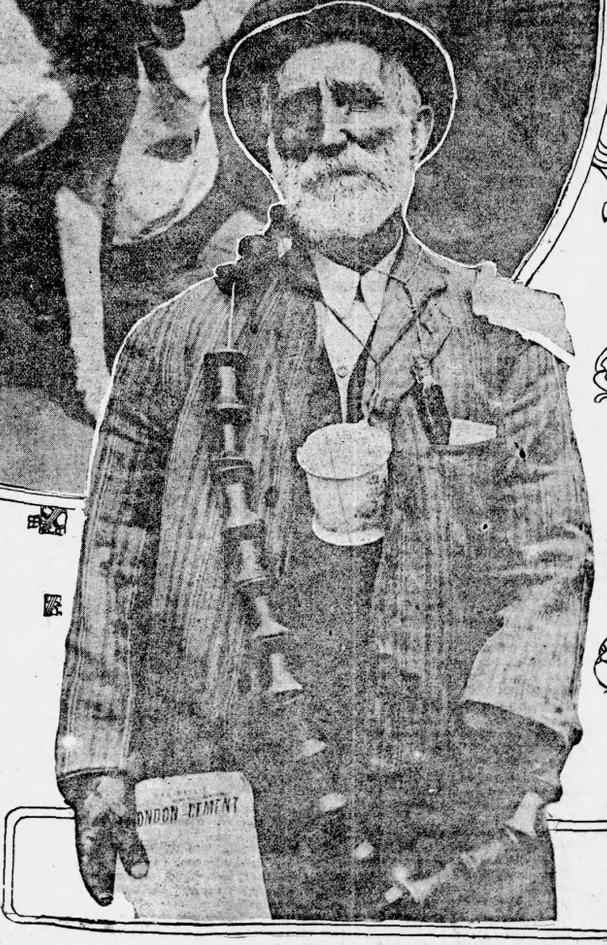
THE DECAY OF BEGGING





SHORTY lay flat on his face on the baking pavement, one arm outstretched in a pitiful gesture for alms. The two stumps called his legs were hunched beneath his body and his black face glistened with sweat.

Shorty was very drunk, but those who pitied him as he lay there and flung coins into the upturned palm did not know that the brain of the poor beggar was so besotted that he hardly knew whether it was dollars or dimes they gave him.

The police arrested Shorty and afterward he came into the care of the Associated Charities.

That was five years ago. Today Shorty grins pleasantly as he shines your shoes at his little stand near Five Points, pockets the coin you give him with a "thank you, sah!" and turns it into bread and butter instead of beer.

This is one method of dealing with beggars in Atlanta.

Last summer a man walked into an office of a doctor in the Grant building. On his breast was a sign. "I am deaf and dumb and want to go back home. Will you help me?" The doctor gave him a dollar and forgot all about it.

Two hours later the doctor was getting his daily shave in a local barber shop. He glanced at the next chair and after a moment of puzzled scrutiny recognized its occupant as the deaf mute. The mute's barber spoke to him.

"A little tonic, sir?" he said.

"Comb it dry," said the mute.

The doctor had the fakir arrested, they took him to the Associated Charities, and he left town on the next train.

BEGGING ON THE WANE.

Between the choice of getting out of town or getting in business, Atlanta is being swept clean of the dregs of society.

Begging is on the wane.

There are at present scores of former beggars in this city who are supporting themselves by hard work, there are perhaps a dozen who are really begging under the guise of a peddler's license, but there is not one who is an unvarnished solicitor of alms for which he gives nothing in return.

If there are any of the latter they come here swiftly, stay but a short while, and get out as soon as they can.

The Associated Charities has a unique method of dealing with them. As soon as a new beggar is reported in the city a case is made against him. If he wants work they get it for him, but most of them are like the man with the cataract on his eye.

The Associated Charities offered to have it removed, to make him, who was blind, see again.

"Not much," said the beggar. "I'd rather be blind and make $10 a day than work hard with my eyes open for 50 cents."

"Well, you can't make that $10 in Atlanta," they told him.

It is against the law to beg in Atlanta, but it is permissible to get a peddler's license and sell shoe strings and pencils. The law says that begging is to exhibit some affliction or deformity for the purpose of getting alms. These beggar-peddlers sling a shoe string or so over their shoulders, with it.

But even these peddlers have a hard time in Atlanta. The new ones are sent away as soon as they get here, the old ones have been here so long that they have enough friends and backing to make them stick. But so long as the new never gain a foot-hold and the old ones sooner or later pass away, the outlook is bright for a beggarless city in Atlanta.

Joe Logan, head of the associated charities, predicts such a city within the next few years.

Mr. Logan is hot on the trails of the new ones, to help or to hinder them whichever they want, and he is doing all he can to take the old ones off the street and either send them to the alms house or give them real employment.

"THE TWILIGHT ZONE"

The officers hate to arrest a beggar. It looks bad to the public. So it is that there is one spot in the city of Atlanta where a man can beg without danger of arrest by passing policemen.

They call it "the twilight zone."

At a certain spot on the Whitehall street viaduct the "beats" of two policemen meet each other. A beggar comes there and sits down. Mr. Logan, of the associated charities, passes along, sees the man, and calls the officer on the right who comes slowly toward him.

"I want to make a case against this man," says Mr. Logan.

"See the other cop," the policeman on the right tells him. "This guy's on his beat."

The officer strolls away, the beggar hops two feet to the right, and just then the policeman on the left strolls up.

"I want to make a case against this man," says Mr. Logan.

"See the other cop," says the policeman on the left, looking at the beggar who has slid gently out of his jurisdiction, "This guy's on his beat."

It takes a special officer from police headquarters to make a case against that beggar and have him taken off the street.

A DEAD INDUSTRY.

Atlanta's colony of beggars themselves are agreed that begging is a losing business in this city. They are as much down on the associated charities as the associated charities are anxious to help them to quit begging.

In the good old days, they say, Atlanta was the beggar's heaven. One coined money then. There was the case of the Peyton sisters, bred of the finest old Virginia stock but so pauperized by years of unceasing adversity, that they were forced to take to the streets.

Rose Peyton died several years ago in a hovel in one of the most squalid streets in Atlanta, yet her attorneys found on examination that she owned real estate properties and stocks which made her close to a millionairess, a fortune made through unstinting begging from dawn to darkness and stinted living at all times.

In a way, Atlanta is a better market for beggars than ever before on account of the tireless efforts of the associated charities to rid the city of them. With the decrease of the demand for alms there should be an increase of the supply, yet we have the word of the beggars themselves that such is not the condition.

There is John Cashion—call him a peddler if you will—the blind man who sells papers through Atlanta's down-town blocks. He has been blind for years, and has been educated at the Staunton school for the blind in Virginia.

He was found sitting at a table far back in a little restaurant on Viaduct place. He was reading the paper. What? O, it was the weekly Milwaukee sheet for the blind, with the raised letters giving a complete synopsis of the news of the day.

"How about it, Mr. Cashion?" he was asked. "Does it pay, this business?"

"No, sir," he answered. "Joe Logan and the associated charities keep me on the hop all the time. I've had to go to council twice about it in order to keep my license. Then there's the newsboys. They get a lot of my sales from me, an old blind fellow. If you could tip me off to a good town I would leave Atlanta today. It's no place for me. Why, when I came here six years ago, I had money, but now I'm worse than broke."

"I've lost my dog, too," he said, looking down at a black cur that lay at his feet. "This little fellow followed me home last Friday, though, and I reckon I'll make as good a dog out of him as the other. I call him Fauste."

Where Viaduct place turns into Whitehall is Cashion's wife, a little old woman with dark blue glasses who sits patiently on a canvas bottomed chair. There were papers and chewing gum on her lap, and a white dog lay beside her, switching lazily at the flies with his tail.

"How long have you been blind, Mrs. Cashion?" she was asked.

"Who, me?" she said. "Law, I ain't blind. Just near-sighted. These blue glasses keep the sun out o' my eyes, and then they help business, you see."

She snickered.

"It's bad enough these days, anyway," she went on. "I reckon I don't make mor'n fifteen cents a day here. Me and John 'll be leavin' soon I guess."

THE CHARM OF MUSIC

So on bad days Mrs. Cashion takes to her blue glasses and Mr. Cashion gets out his music-box. Music, it seems, hath charms to soothe the tight pocket-book as well as the savage breast.

The old man with the flute is another "peddler" who finds this true. No one knows his name, but for many years he has walked Atlanta's streets. Over his shoulders lie the perennial shoe-strings, in his hand the flute wails out its wistful appeal.

A few months ago he lost the instrument and woe fell upon his shoulders. They put the case up to the associated charities. It was either a new flute or the alms-house for the old man. Before the board of directors had time to act, some one bought him a new flute, and back he went upon the streets, almost happy that he could play the old tunes once again and sell the old shoe-strings.

ONCE UPON A TIME

By Angus Perkerson

JONAH'S whale would be scarce a mouthful for the fish that the deep sea and the clear streams are yielding up upon these imaginative June days.

There must be something in the June air that stimulates the mind to unsurpassed imagery. Probably, Queen Scheherezade began the tales of the Arabian Nights upon a June evening, and told first of a six-foot trout that she caught upon the estate of her father, the vizier.

This is the "Once-Upon-A-Time" season when a quarterly conference would grow reminiscent.

The fish that were a pound last year have been nourished by time to a wondrous growth; and those that were hooked in the years gone by have become not merely fish, but marvels.

Yet, no leviathon among them all can furnish the dash and gallantly of two sword fish who fought at Little Cumberland over a question of honor. Milt Saul bears testimony to this incident.

It is an unusual happening told in that vein of strict accuracy which has caused fishermen and statisticians to be catalgued similarly.

Figures never lie, neither do fish, but—

A BRIGHT, BRACING MORNING

Well, as the fisherman tells it, it was a bright and bracing morning. The sky was swept as clean as though a new-patented carpet cleaner had been rolled over the clouds. Neither then nor afterward did the weather have any relation to that strange occurrence upon Little Cumberland. But every story must have a setting and as the narrator said, a few words of description are an artistic introduction for that strange event.

In the beginning the fishermen had no intention of discovering the most masterly fish story that ever came from Cumberland. Their object was bass. The keeper of the light house had lost two pigs, a domineckerchief house ter, and yard dog, and in each instance he had discovered bear tracks near the remains.

Each time the tracks had also approached nearer to his open-air sleeping porch. Being of a healthful turn of mind, he was unwilling to forego the night air, but at the same time he feared to awake some morning and find himself in the plight of the pigs, the rooster, and the yard dog.

THE FISHERMEN SET FORTH

For his protection and for the purpose of adding a bear hunt to their list of reminiscences, the fishermen set forth upon this bright, crisp morning for Little Cumberland.

Mr. Saul himself was at the prow as the boat breasted the waves and sailed away into the morning—away before the sanitarily clean sky touched the ocean. Adventure was in the air. They sniffed it along with the salt. Romance was stirring. Every little fleecy cloud seemed to forecast not only fair weather, but also a fair morning's hunt. It was a morning of mornings. Retribution seemed to be waiting for the bear and protection for the healthful lighthouse keeper and his remaining pigs and roosters.

It was such a morning as D'Artagnan might have feared forth for a day of adventure; an unequaled morning; such a morning as only a fisherman, stirred by a June day, can recall.

Mr. Saul, in the prow, looking toward the sky line, where earth and sea seemed to meet—scanning that far road of quiet waves which seemed to be taking them away into the morning, saw the flurry which led to their strange discovery.

Off to the right, here he could glimpse an unfrequented part of Little Cumberland (the goal of the hunters had hove into view) he could discern a commotion. It was as though sand and water were being flung into the air. He could even hear a faint sound as of bodies threshing against the sand.

CRIED "FORE"

"Fore," he cried, or the nautical term which is used to arouse the attention, and the boat put about.

It cut its way through the waves, grounded, and they sprang out and raced across the sand. Two sword fish were engaged in a duel in a pool hollowed out in the sand. They were fish of the French school, and fenced as nicely as though nature had equipped them with rapiers.

For half an hour they fought, when, finally, one with a flourish like that of Cyrano, thrust himself forward and ran his adversary through. Then, the victor, who himself had been mortally wounded, turned upon his side and died.

Mr. Saul's own explanation is that the two fish had quarreled over a fair mermaid, and had fought this deadly duel to settle their difference.

In the eagerness of everyone to return and tell the story first, the bear hunt was abandoned.

THE FAMOUS BASS.

And, then, there is the instance of that famous bass, which Mr. John Courtney caught in the fish pond of Mr. Richard Peters in Gordon county.

That bass was known throughout a section of the state. None could catch him. He stole the bait from any fisherman's hook, and went scot free.

From all around anglers tried their science and lore upon him. But they had as well have fished for the moon. He was a bass who had learned an unnatural wisdom and meant to use it to the end that he should die a natural death.

But never lived the fish who couldn't be caught with the right bait.

Mr. Courtney was one of a party from Atlanta whom Mr. Peters challenged to catch the bass. If any one of them would make the catch, he promised the party the most famous dinner in the history of the county. All tried, a red mouse succeeded. Mr. Courtney had used every known bait; every stratagem, every device. In disgust, he was quitting the pond when he kicked up a nest of mice. He impaled a nice fat red one, dropped this new bait into the pond, and jerked out the trout.

Another incident is that of the mosquitoes. Postmaster Hugh McKee, who tells it, was fishing for tarpon in Florida. One peculiarity of this fish is its elasticity of weight. A tarpon which weighed 100 pounds in Florida is quite equal to 500 pounds when the story is told in Atlanta.

Since the trip began Mr. McKee had hooked not a single fish. It seemed as though ill luck, like one of the Old Man of the Sea in the story of Sinbad, had settled upon his shoulders.

THE NIGHT TRIP.

Even though he made a strike, the fish was free of the hook in another minute and waiting for more bait.

"We'll try them at night," said the guide one evening. "That brings luck."

This night was far different from the fine bracing morning when the sword fish were discovered dueling on Little Cumberland. It was a muttering, ominous night. The clouds lowered, there was rain in the air, and the sea rose in a heavy swell. Toward midnight, they set out for tarpon. The stars were veiled, but in the dark the postmaster made his cast, and it must have been that a tarpon was waiting. As the hook touched the water it was gobbled down; in an instant the biggest strike of the fishing trip had been made.

The motor boat careened under the rush of the big fish; and the guide, who was silent and superior in the conventional manner of guides, said it was a "whale."

The postmaster agreed with him. It pulled like a school of whales. At times the fish would leap into the air—they could see it dimly. The big body would rise from the water, go straight upward, and flounder back again.

The minutes passed, an hour was gone, nearly two hours had been spent in the fight with the tarpon, when the guide dropped a rope overboard, looped it round the head of the big fish, and they pulled the catch aboard.

ENGINE GOES DEAD.

The guide turned to starte the boat but it didn't start. In an instant the engine had gone dead. There they lay in the heavy wash of the sea, the boat moving as the waves directed.

The motor boat, like its brother, in perversity, the automobile, had chosen to balk at this inopportune moment. Had the tide been going out, the two fishermen and the tarpon would have been washed to sea. As it was, they sat in the dark and drifted slowly landward.

After an age, a streak of light appeared in the sky. Morning began to dawn, and showed the gray, ragged clouds. On one hand was a faint line, which marked the land. But it wasn't this welcomed sight that held the eye of either the guide or the postmaster. Nearer, hanging over the water was a black, funnel shaped cloud, a whirling mass, from which came a rushing sound. It was proceeding straight for the boat.

The guide said a prayer in a mixture of Creole French and English. Even the tarpon wiggled its tail in a sort of hysteria.

The black cloud whirled into the air, dipped down, and set forward, straight for the boat. Two feet away it veered to one side and swept by—millions upon millions of mosquitoes, taking their way to sea. Had the black cloud not turned aside, they probably would have been set upon and dispatched by mosquitoes.

They drifted to land, near one of the forts with which the government guards the Atlantic coast, and were returned to camp in a launch.

Other incidents as strange or stranger are being recalled as the fishing season. Undoubtedly June when Queen Scheherezade began the tales of the Arabian

CUPID IS THE THOUGHTLESS FELLO

He Never Gives a Fair Maid Her "Ideal"—Not Even if a $15,000,000 Heiress

(Special Correspondence.)

NEW YORK.—Here's the most beautiful society belle in the "four hundred" and the "ideal" Dan Cupid picked for her and whom she will marry today.

She is Miss Lilla Brokaw Gilbert, the $15,000,000 heiress.

He is Howard Pierce Renshaw, of Troy, New York.

Ever since her debut Miss Gilbert has been an idealist. A year ago, to some friends, she laughingly confided her conception of an ideal man, whom she announced she would marry some day.

"He must be six feet tall and fond of athletics. He must be smooth-shaven. He must be a good rider. He must be a brunet and a good fellow. He must be fond of animals; have a firm jaw, be an Episcopalian, a Republican and a money-maker," she said.

"He must have thick, curly hair over his left ear, with no red in it; a straight nose, large and intelligent, but not soulful eyes, and he must have decided ideas about raising pigs and poultry.

"He must like lemon in his ice cream with a fork and must wear clothes like John Drew."

That was sthe ideal she described.

Today Miss Gilbert is happily up to the chance of her ideal; a man who is almost different from the one she described.

He is fond of outdoor sports and motoring, but otherwise he does not meet with one of the set down by his fiancee in so much for the plans of when little Dan Cupid gets arrows.

Miss Gilbert's father, Bramhall Gilbert, who died in Bains, France, in 1911, left fortune.

ATLANTA "PEN AND BRUSH" CLUB

MRS CHARLES JEROME

MISS ELIZABETH VAUGHAN

MISS LOUISE MELLICHAMP

MISS FRANCES WOOLLEY

MISS VIRGINIA WOOLLEY

IF you are prone to long rambles of a summer afternoon in the woods and valleys about Atlanta, you have no doubt seen them. Perhaps they drifted into your vision as you swung up the brow of some grassy hillside and found them scattered here and there on the other side of the green slope; or you may have rounded a curve in a road red with dust to encounter one of their number snuggled beneath a great gray rock by the side of a chuckling stream.

Perhaps you rubbed your eyes and wondered if you had strayed into the Luxumboug Gardens or had stumbled across the Latin Quarter of Paris; for it is unusual indeed to discover an artist in a stained apron endeavoring to reproduce the Georgia cow on canvas or paint a picture of a bend in the Chattahoochee river.

They are Atlanta's real Bohemians, these members of the Pen and Brush club. They withdraw from the public gaze in the winter, but with the first breath of May out they come, their arms filled with tubes, brushes, and smeary palettes, their faces aglow with the creative genius of art.

Sometimes they spend hour after hour through the droning hush of a June day in happy silence sketching trips around the suburbs of the city; again they make it a Saturday night at the Carnegie library, a picturesque model on the rostrum and the chairs and easels clustered thick around.

SIXTEEN MEMBERS

There are sixteen of them in the club, the only organization in Atlanta that makes a practical study of art. The art association does great things for Atlanta, and there is not a member of the Pen and Brush club that does not hope with all his heart that the association will bring to pass the establishment of an art gallery here. But as far as real art work goes, there is no organization in Atlanta save the club.

Its membership is varied, painters, newspaper men, commercial artists, illustraters and beginners at the work.

There is Harry Osgood, who has taught in Chicago, studied in New York and Paris, and taught in Atlanta; there is Mrs. Osgood, head of the department of drawing in the public schools, there is Miss Virginia Woolley, president of the club, an artist of national reputation who is now conducting a school here; there are youngsters and oldsters, all naturally drawn together by the common call.

The Pen and Brush club is the outcome of long years of struggle. Art has never been a thriving industry in Atlanta. Its highest success was attained here five or six years ago when the art association established a school in the Alfriend building which existed but a few scant years.

The students had an art league in connection with the school, ambitious ones came to Atlanta from many places to ply the charcoal and the brush. There was a fair chance that Atlanta might become a real art center.

But not for long. The school was discontinued and Atlanta artists were stranded on their own resources and their own encouragement.

CLUB IS ORGANIZED

Finally, this spring, the Pen and Brush club was formed, and has proved successful from the first. This is due to the enthusiasm of the members.

Sketching trips will be held during the summer and will continue into the fall, when the landscapes will change from sunlight and emerald to reds and gold.

Throughout the year the club will hold in-door meetings at the Carnegie library. The nominal dues required are used to employ a model—the most picturesque of the characters to be found in the city.

Here, in the well-lighted assembly room, the hours pass all too swiftly for the sketchers, and there is not one who does not heave a sigh of regret as he takes a last long look at his drawing before he carefully folds it away.

Each is helping himself along the road to the Great Goal, and each is helping the other.

They are learning other things besides art, too. They are aided to a greater appreciation of the beautiful in all forms of life.

Atlanta is a better city for the Pen and Brush club. It is acquiring citizens who will help to make it a finer and more beautiful township.

SOMETHING ATLANTA NEEDS

And this is one thing that Atlanta needs, something that every city in America lacks, a true appreciation of the beautiful.

"When I came back to Atlanta from Europe," says a member of the club, "I was surprised. Over there the cities are filled with flowers, even the vegetable venders know how to arrange their carrots and garlic in a most attractive manner. In Atlanta the buildings are ugly, the public places are sordid, and the worst of it is that nobody seems to care."

She is right. It is the very thing that the Pen and Brush club wants to change. The establishment of an art museum and a school here, its members say, will help more than anything else. The club proposes to do whatever it can by giving exhibitions of its work at intervals during the coming year.

$15 WAS PAID TO SIDNEY LANIER FOR HIS GREATEST POEM

WHEN Sidney Lanier was fighting against the clutch of tuberculosis in a Baltimore hospital he received a letter from a young girl in West Point, Ga.

She told him that she was but sixteen years old, that she was intending to begin the publication of a newspaper. She asked for a contribution.

So it was that the "Song of the Chattahoochee" was written, the most famous poem of a very famous poet, "the sweetest songster of the south," the man who is coming to be recognized as the greatest writer of verse that America has produced within the last half of a century.

Lanier sent "The Song of the Chattahoochee" to the West Point girl and it was printed in the Riverside Echo. In return he received a check for fifteen dollars.

Today the girl who bought "The Song of the Chattahoochee' and edited the first paper ever published in Georgia by a woman, lives in College Park, where her garden of sweet-peas and roses is a never-ending source to her of pleasure and profit. One of her proudest possessions is the old file of the little paper of which she was once the editor, and in the first column of the first paper is the poem and the letter from Sidney Lanier.

GIVES UP NEWSPAPER WORK.

The girl's name was Lola Oregon Chisolm, the woman's name is Mrs. E. A. Parker. She gave up her newspaper work within a year after she started and now spends her time in growing beautiful flowers for other people to buy.

In 1877 an editress was an unknown species of the newspaper family in the state of Georgia. Yet, down in West Point Loula Chisolm, just graduated from high school, decided to be one. She bought a Gordon press, a pencil, and some scratch paper, and was ready to start.

For a year she published her paper, a small, eight-page monthly. She had to be her own reporter, editor, typesetter, compositor, and pressman. She even had to be her own circulation department. Yet single handed she managed to get out quite a creditable little sheet, and at least it had the distinction of a contribution from Sidney Lanier.

She printed that poem in the first issue, together with letter which he wrote to her. Here is the letter:

55 Lexington Street,
Baltimore, Md., Nov. 21, 1877.

Dear Miss Chisolm:—While thinking some days ago of my dear old Georgia, which seems to grow upon my affections with every day of my enforced exile, the idea of the accompanying poem took possession of me, and I finally determined to make it the base of a work for your paper. I have therefore, written for you this "Song of the Chattahoochee," and sincerely hope it may find favor.

Very truly yours,
SIDNEY LANIER.

$15 AS PAYMENT.

It "found favor," although the finances of the Riverside Echo permitted not of a larger bonus than $15 for the author. The poem and the letter were printed, although the manuscript was thoughtlessly thrown away. Editress Chisolm had no idea then of the value that sheet of note paper might one day be to her.

It was only a few years after that January in 1878 when the "Song of the Chattahoochee" first appeared to the public, that Sidney Lanier died, cut off in the best years of his life. It was the old story. The author who had to struggle for the slightest recognition in the days when his ability was at its highest, was hailed as the poet laureate of his generation once he was dead and gone.

"The Song of the Chattahoochee" began to be as widely known as Tennyson's "Brook." Many papers claimed it, it was copied and circulated east and west until its original publisher was forgotten.

Loula Chislom had long ago stopped getting out her little paper, and not until today has she known or cared enough to claim some merit as the first to place before the public the work which made the muddy Chattahoochee as famous as the the yellow Tiber or "Iser rolling rapidly."

A MESSAGE from GOVERNOR-ELECT SLATON

"In Georgia," Says Governor-elect Slaton, "We Have Every Inspiration to Pride and Hope—Never Has the Horizon Been Wider or Brighter—We Marvel When We Compare It With Other States—This Year Is Full of Promise of a Large Crop—Why Should Not the People of This State, Filled With So Many Good Citizens, Readily Responsive to the Successes and Sorrows of Their Neighbors, Be Happy and Hopeful?"

We all love the optimist, and the world yields to him its richest rewards. However lowering the clouds or adverse the conditions, he is looking for better times and his hopefulness aids in producing them. Macaulay, in one of his essays, describes the "eagle fire of Chatham, in Westminster Abbe, carved with cunning skill, into outstretched hand, bidding England be of good cheer, and hurl defiance at her foes." The great financier who died in Italy a few weeks ago, was sanguine of a better future filled with more glorious opportunities than he had ever enjoyed. He sounded no note of the pessimist.

And this is apropos of conditions in Georgia. The other day, I heard a great merchant speaking of the small crops of 1912 and hard collections, but he wound up in cheery tone by saying that this state was the most recuperative in the world. One good crop, a little lessening of expenditure and a closer grip of the purse string, and Georgia was again singing the song of prosperity.

This is true. Business optimism is largely a mental condition. In times of panic, there is just as much money, the soil is as fertile and the undeveloped resources as great, but we have just lost confidence. The strong men who go about their work with smiling countenances and with an abounding faith in the ultimate reward of honesty, industry and economy, are the benefatcors of our race. Their spirit is contagious, it is irresistible, and soon it gets the wheels of the factory humming and spurs all activities to greater effort.

ENGLAND'S EXAMPLE.

One who reads the English histories or political works of the eighteenth century is always finding that the country was going to ruin but some how it was found that human happiness and accomplishment had been increased.

Of course, this does not mean the life of the butterfly that only sees and provides for sunny days and summer weather. The true optimist sees the troubles and his courage and patience tries to remedy them, and has an unfailing confidence that he can conquer them.

Hercules was reputed to pass along the road and when he found a man struggling with his heavy load, he assumed giant size and helped him. The despondent who distrusted himself and made on effort was passed by. The story always appealed to me.

So, here in Georgia, we have every inspiration to pride and hope. Never has the horizon been wider or brighter. We marvel when we compare it with other states. The owner of a great railroad—pledge for all she owes—the connecting link between great sections—she offers security for her entire debt and the surplus in her treasury would represent a fabulous sum. With remarkable self control the distinguishing characteristic of a great and stable people, she has kept it through the years of gloom and has preserved it when strength was required to resist the temptation to part with it.

RESOURCES HARDLY TOUCHED.

Her resources have hardly been touched. Scientific agriculture promises a multiplication of farm products. More money is appropriated for educational purposes than ever before. The constitution has been amended so that high schools can be established in every community. Companies have been organized to remove stumps from farms for the value of the stump. Telephones are adding to the charm of farm life. The girls are being taught canning industries by which they may can at home and sell millions of dollars of canned goods annually.

This year is full of promise of a large crop. Why should not the people of this state, filled with so many good citizens, readily responsive to the successes and sorrows of their neighbors, be happy and hopeful?

It is true that the legislature has spent more than the state had. In the full blood of over confidence, seeing all around them the good that could be done, and desiring to do it all at once, they have not spent in proportion to their purse. They did not follow the example of Joseph and provide for the lean years. But a short season of economy, a peremtory resolution to follow the simple, old-fashioned rule of limiting the expenditures to the income—and all will be well.

GEORGIA A GARDEN SPOT.

Over the whole nation Georgia is looked upon as a garden spot, where its natural resources are augmented by the greatest of all wealth, an industrious, strong, law abiding people. Untold capital will come into our territory to develop our possibilities. With it will come all the comforts that accompany prosperity. If our legislature reflects the strength and the kindly virtues of their constituents and administers with careful business judgment the state's finances they will doubly confirm the right of every Georgian to be proud of his state.

I hope every bond of the $3,500,000 of the bonds to be refunded in 1915 will be taken by Georgians. It will be the best advertisement we could make and would testify our high confidence in the state's credit. The course of our next legislature is going to have great influence in the disposition of our bonds and I believe it will measure fully up to its responsibilities.

I would utter a note of good cheer and prophesy for the state a future of unexampled achievement.

Beautiful Babies

(Special Cable to The Journal.)

LONDON.—How to preserve and increase the beauty of children was discussed at the conference of the European Orthodontia society at the rooms of the Medical Society of London the other day.

The conference, which is the first of its kind to be held in England, has brought together orthodontists—that is, students of the science of the treatment of irregularities of the teeth in relation to the development of the features—from the following countries:

England, Belgium, France, America, Italy, Holland, Germany, Sweden and Austria.

THE SPORT OF BASEBALL AS A MINISTER SEES IT

BY WILLIAM RUSSELL OWEN.

A minister, like any other red-blooded man, craves some sort of recreation. The much overworked minister must have it. Walking the rounds of ministerial visitations does not afford a real recreation. This may get to be a grind to the minister. There is exercise to the limbs, but the psychology of the conscious duty and habit gets to be irksome sometimes; then the mind craves for recreation. Preachers have the fun spirit bubbling up all the time like other good spirited animals, and they must play—must frolic in a wholesome way. There was in the long-gone ages just about Christmas time a week of recreation called the Feast of Fools. Then solemn men laughed and learned men frolicked like children. That feast often went into excesses, but the pastor who stumbles along under the weight of a community's woes, the bearer of other men's crosses is the minister, this toiling teacher of the people must have his recreation now and then.

TENNIS AND BASEBALL.

I played tennis at college. I finished a terrific theological course more because of my tennis racquet than because of a smattering of brains. My inclinations have always been to the athletic field. I played end on my high school team in Portsmouth, Va. I weighed 110 pounds as end on a team averaging 170 pounds. Our left guard weighed 225 pounds. I took to college football. My first year out I captained the second team. My second and third years I was quarterback at 131 pounds on the Richmond college team. I started in the ministry at Baltimore. I immediately concluded that my chosen profession would not hinder me in the athletic pursuit by which I had kept my health. I maintain it. I immediately had access to some of the best tennis courts in that city. Tennis requires speed and accuracy and a quick thinking head. So does preaching. If some sermons had the speed of a warm tennis After the intellectual and spiritual game behind them, there would be less ecclesiastical somnambulism. preparation for a sermon the best preparation is a Saturday afternoon on the tennis court or on some green diamond "hitting the ball," or using as a substitute a wholesome game at Ponce de Leon or out on some secluded field where the trolley touches.

SAW WALTER JOHNSON SET HIS MARK.

I was in St. Louis two weeks ago when Walter Johnson was there. We stopped at the same hotel. That was the time when this greatest pitcher of present day baseball was in his stride. He had pitched fifty-two innings without a run being scored. On that afternoon he was to try to set a new world's record. I was standing behind the plate watching his terrific speed and graceful benders and quick breaks. A great many writers tell the public that Johnson depends solely on his speed for effectiveness. This is quite true, but the ball that set up a new record of fifty-three innings was a beautifully executed out curve that swept in a remarkably deceptive way over the left corner of the plate. The stands in St. Louis were a bedlam for a while, and "Germany" Schaefer ran to meet the modest Johnson with a hilarious pat on the back. Johnson finished three more innings without a run and set up the world's record of fifty-six innings.

BASEBALL IN ATLANTA.

Baseball in Atlanta at Ponce de Leon has always been my weekly recreation when I can get the time from my overwhelming and crowding duties to get to a game. I purposely try to rest on Saturday afternoons. The Scripture teaches the value of the Sabbath day as a day dedicated to God's worship and rest. My hardest work is done on Sundays. I make generally four addresses on Sunday besides teaching two Sunday school classes. So to get ready for Sunday I rest Saturday afternoons. If any special duty calls me, that duty is first, but when it is possible I go out to witness an amateur game on the back lots, see Tech drub Sewanee or take to the grand stand at "Poncey." I generally stumble over a large part of my congregation and a dozen or so of the leading Atlanta ministers.

WHAT ABOUT OUR TEAM.

Atlanta this year has the best team in the last three years. It is the best team in the circuit, barring Mobile. By the way, Dave Robinson, right fielder of Mobile, is from my native city. His father is a deacon in the church where my father was pastor for nearly thirty years. His family is a splendid

Appointment of a Commission to Revise Criminal Laws Is Urged By Hugh M. Dorsey, Solicitor General of Fulton County

The "Dumb" Act Which Restrains a Judge From Expressing an Opinion of the Case Under Trial is One Which Mr. Dorsey Particularly Urges for Repeal---He Holds That This Act Interferes With the Thorough Investigation of the Case Under Trial

In the Opinion of Solicitor General Dorsey, the Georgia Criminal Laws all Make for the Protection of the Defendant---He Grants That the Defendant Should be Presumed as Innocent Until Guilt is Proved, But He Insists That Rules of Evidence and Procedure Should Leave the Prosecution Free of Any Handicap---the Solicitor is Convinced That the Surest Way to Improve the Criminal Laws of the State is By Appointing a Commission

THE Georgia Bar Association frequently has urged reform in the criminal laws, and last year, judges of the superior court met in session at the capitol to discuss a revision of the code.

Why is it that the criminal laws of Georgia fail to secure swifter and surer punishment of crime? Why is it that they offer loopholes for the escape of defendants?

Hugh M. Dorsey, solicitor general for Fulton county, is not ready to agree that the criminal procedure of Georgia is lax.

But he says:

"Every rule of evidence and procedure, and every presumption in the trial of criminal cases in Georgia gives the defendant an advantage. I would make no change in the presumption that the defendant is innocent until he is proved guilty. But I would urge such a change as would leave the state unhampered by the nature of the evidence and the procedure."

COMMISSION TO CHANGE LAWS.

He believes that a commission consisting of a judge of the supreme court, a judge of the court of appeals, two superior court judges, two solicitor generals, and two or three lawyers should be appointed by the state to revise the criminal code.

Such revision seems to be needed in order to make the enforcement of criminal laws more certain.

In the opinion of Mr. Dorsey, the defendant has all the advantage. Not only is he presumed to be innocent, but also he is given the assistance of rules of evidence and procedure.

In some respects, the defendant in criminal cases is given greater protection by Georgia laws than by the procedure in any other state.

Mr. Dorsey disagrees with those who take an alarming view of the effect of criminal law in Georgia. But he is much in favor of a commission to revise the laws, and in this opinion he has the support of foremost attorneys.

A member of the Georgia Bar association, writing several years ago upon criminal practice in Georgia, said that Georgia laws hamper the prosecution more than the laws of any other state.

MR. DORSEY'S RECOMMENDATION.

Solicitor General Dorsey recommends the following changes as a means toward making criminal law more effective in Georgia:

"First of all, improve the laws governing bonds and the forfeiture of bonds. The procedure in such matters is so cumbersome that it takes up an endless amount of time. It should be changed so that an immediate judgment could be rendered."

As it is, bonds are forfeited, defendants go to other states, and the trial is at an end.

"Another change that is needed," continued Mr. Dorsey, "is in the selection of a jury. The state should have the right to reject as many jurors as the defense. But, as it is, in many cases, the defendant has twice as many 'strikes' as the prosecutor.

"I also think that the prosecution should be allowed greater liberty in the questions that it asks when choosing a jury. Only four statutory questions are now allowed:

"'Have you from seeing the crime committed or having heard any of the testimony delivered on oath, formed or expressed any opinion in regard to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner at the bar?

"'Have you any prejudice resting on your mind for or against the prisoner at the bar?

"'Is your mind perfectly impartial between the state and the accused?'

"And in murder trials, this last question: 'Are you conscientiously opposed to capital punishment?'

QUESTIONING JURORS.

"I don't think," explained Mr. Dorsey, "that the prosecution should go to an extreme in the questions that it asks. But I do believe that before a juryman is chosen, he should be questioned about his employment, whether or not he is related to the defendant, whether he ever has been associated with the defendant.

"Another needed change is authority for the state to appeal to a higher court. I think that this right should be limited; but, with restrictions, the state should be allowed to contest a verdict which seems unjust.

"As it is, the state must abide by whatever a judge decides, no matter what that may be.

"Authority is needed by which witnesses may be extradicted and returned from other states. Under prevailing conditions, if a material witness chooses to leave Georgia and go to some other state, the prosecution is powerless. He can't be extradicted, and if he doesn't chose to return, the state can't make him do so. I have in mind a witness who was sent off to California because he was the one individual upon whom the prosecution depended. He couldn't be forced to return, and the defendant on trial went unpunished. Numerous other instances of this sort cause the defeat of justice.

"But even more important in its effect would be the abolishment of all rules which exclude material evidence. One illustration is the rule which prohibits a husband or a wife from testifying against the other. The only exception to this is where the husband has assaulted the wife. When she has attacked her husband he can't testify. The effect of such a rule of procedure is simply to exclude evidence which would throw light on the case. We recently had one striking evidence of this."

The solicitor had in mind the Grace case, where Eugene Grace was prohibited from testifying against his wife.

In his reference to this case he also protested against the right given to defendants to make a statement when they are not under oath.

"Nothing," he insisted, "is more abused than this privilege of defendants to make a statement to which they do not swear. This right is used simply as a vehicle to put before a jury matter which is immaterial and which the state could not have anticipated or been able to contradict.

"Mr. Wigmore, in his 'Work on Evidence,' says: 'Georgia is the only state in which the prisoner makes a statement not under oath.'

DEFENDANT SHOULD BE SWORN.

"I believe that the defendant should be sworn, that the state should have the right to cross-examine him, and that his evidence should be weighed just as that of any other testimony submitted to the jury.

"The state now can cross-examine a defendant only with his consent. But it should not be his right to decide. The state should have the authority to cross-examine any defendant whom it chooses to question.

"The prosecution should also be given the right to comment on the failure of a defendant to make a statement. If a defendant decides not to state his case to the jury, there is no sufficient reason why the prosecuting attorney should not refer to the fact. But the slightest reference of that sort now means a mistrial.

"I also believe that in certain cases the state should have the right to bring a defendant's character into question.

"But, perhaps one of the most hampering restrictions placed upon the investigation of crime by the courts is the 'Dumb' act, which prohibits an expression of opinion on the part of the trial judge. If he does give expression to his opinion, a writ of error is granted without any reference to the verdict.

"It should be the privilege of the court to sum up the evidence and to comment upon it fully to the jury. The judge should take as much part in the trial as the jury itself.

"I believe that the judge should have the right to suspend sentences. Now he can only forebear to pass sentence.

"The right to amend indictments should be given to the state.

"The burden should not be upon the state to prove venue—that is, the place where the crime was committed—unless the issue is raised by the defense.

"But, after all, the most important recommendation I can make is that a commission be appointed to decide what changes should be made in the criminal laws.

one in the city. Robinson reminds me of Joe Jackson, now of Cleveland. He bats more like Speaker, of Boston, but runs with the stride of Jackson and has his marks. The infield of Billy Smith's team is "air tight." I think the baseball writers call it. It is a strong batting combination, but a trifle slow on the bases. They take very few risks on the bases which maybe for them is quite right because the infield is too slow on the bases to steal with regularity. I would like to see speed on the bases in the Atlanta team. Smith is the best all-round man in the infield, because of his risks on the paths. The outfield is the best, all in all, in the league, as far as I have seen. Strange as it may seem, the weakness of Atlanta's outfield lies on the bases. Long is best, Bailey better, Welchonce fair. If the entire team would practice speed o the bases quite as much as they do batting, Atlanta would quit losing games by a single run.

THE PITCHERS WOBBLY.

This is the spot of greatest weakness, as a whole. Price has had best success of all the pitchers. Musser has the making of a big leaguer if he could stand the strain. Brady is fair, Dent pitched fine ball Monday, Chappelle is a great pitcher when he is going well. When he is off form, five runs an inning is a pastime for his opponents. McGraw changes his pitcher often. So does Griffith, of Washington. Smith never does until they are disastrously gone. If Dent pitched five innings and Musser four they could pitch on successive days and win a big majority of their games. A fast, heady catcher would help the pitchers wonderfully. If Atlanta had one .700 pitcher and more speed on the bases the flag would come to Atlanta this year.

WHY I GO TO THE GAME.

The baseball association does me the courtesy to issue me an annual pass. That has a great deal to do with my attendance. I think that there is a really wise move in granting passes to the city ministers. It certainly gives a good tone to the cleanest sport in America, that is baseball, to have in the grandstand those men in the city who stand for the highest righteousness. When Walter Johnson set his mark at St. Louis the strongest Baptist preachers of the south were at the game thirty strong. Here are three reasons why I attend the games. You will see I have gotten down to make three points, just as the proverbial preacher makes up his sermon.

First, I attend for recreation. I preach with as much enthusiasm as I play a game at my annual Sunday school picnic. My heart beats with a passion to get men over the plate for the last great home run. My everyday business is to teach men how to play the game of life fairly, how to touch every base, how not to kick on life's decisions, how to make a sacrifice to advance a fellow man a single base, and finally that "if you are batting .300 the big leagues will find you out." Baseball as well as any other wholesome sport has in it all the elements of life asmy recreation lies in following the wholesome out of doors game.

Second, I go to the games to test my patience. Baltimore is the worst city in the country that I know fo, roasting a losing team and failing to encourage a good one. I saw a team which had won a pennant in the International league come home to a handful in the stands. St. Louis is the most enthusiastic audience I have ever seen with less to "holler about." Boston is the most loyal city. I saw a game in Boston with 26,000 out at a Saturday game. The trouble with the Atlanta public is "smartness." It taxes my patience mightily to sit near a man or maybe a lady who criticises the inside play of the home team. If a fellow hits a three-bagger and gets out by a hair on third a howl of protest and calls of "bonehead" rise among the crowd. If the fellow had remained on second with a fighting chance to reach third the crowd would have been still more unfair. It is the risk of Cobb, the abandon of Milan of Washington, the dauntlessness of Speaker on the bases that stamp them as great ball players. Atlanta ought to learn that there is more real skill and science in a double steal, or a sacrifice bunt, or a squeeze play than in the sheer ability of swatting the ball and trusting to chance for it to fall in safe territory, which in most cases it does not. So, I always keep my silence in the face of foolish criticisms and I thus develop my patience.

Third, I go to the game to touch elbows with men. Jesus Christ is the one overshadowing inspiration for my life. I want men to know Him. I cannot see that I can reach all kinds of men by staying aloof with a separated crowd of men. I believe the Bible teaches us to be in the world though not of it. I learn human nature at the game. I jot it down in the back rooms of my memory. On Sunday it comes out in a sermon to men.

All in all, there is less of evil and more of good wholesome out of doors recreation and relaxation and pleasant pastime in an honestly played game of baseball than in any other sport I know. I like football better, I have played it more. I prefer to play tennis to baseball. But I get more recreation watching a game of baseball than any other sport.

My teams: All Southern; all American. If I were asked to select the team which I regard as the strongest which might be selected from the Southern league as I have seen them play fn the last three years this would be my choice:

Catcher—Street, Chattanooga.
Pitchers—Atchison, Mongomery; More, Chattanooga.
Shortstop—Ellam, Birmingham.
First base—Agler, Atlanta.
Second base—Kirke, New Orleans.
Third base—Smith, Atlanta.
Left field—Johnston, Chattanooga.
Center field—Jackson, New Orleans.

Catcher—Archer, Chicago.
Pitchers — Johnson, Washington; Mathewson, New York; Wood, Boston.
Shortstop—Tinker, Cincinnati.
First base—McInnis, Philadelphia.
Second base—Collins, Philadelphia.
Third base—Zimmerman, Chicago.
Center field, Cobb, Detroit.
Right field, Milan, Washington.

Gambling Sensation

(Special Cable to The Journal.)

PARIS.—A sensation was caused in the chamber of deputies by charges made during the debate on a bill in regard to the regulation of gambling.

Mr. Georges Barry, deputy for the Seine, brought to the tribune a confidential report made to the detective department by M. Aschwanden, a special commissioner, charged with the surveillance of gaming, which report referred to the relations of deputies and senators with a large casino near Paris.

The minister of the interior immediately ordered an inquiry to be opened as to the origin and authenticity of the allegations.

The new bill before the chamber promises bigger profits to municipalities and the state.

Thus the new proposed tax on gambling would be fixed as follows: Fifteen per cent on less than $100,000 of the gross receipts; 25 per cent on any sum of gross receipts exceeding $100,000 and not exceeding $500,000; 35 per cent on the same receipts between the latter figure and $1,000,000; and, finally, 45 per cent on the receipts over the last figure.

Of the proceeds of these taxes, says the report, the state will hand over to the local corporations concerned only a portion at the rate of from 15 per cent of gross receipts exceeding $1,000,000, keeping the balance for itself.

A PRACTICAL TROUSSEAU FOR THE SUMMER BRIDE

FOR many centuries it was the custom for maidens to plan and make their trousseaux years in advance of their marriage. They spun the fabrics required for their wardrobes and household linens, made the fine laces and embroideries with which they trimmed their gowns and with their own nimble fingers placed the thousands of stitches necessary to fashion the many articles making up the bride's flower.

The maidens of today are far more favored by fortune; the shops provide them with exquisite fabrics, laces and embroideries from which it is an easy matter to choose a suitable foundation for the trousseau, and on this page is given a collection of drawings which furnish you with designs for making an attractive and practical outfit.

The girl who has chosen this summer for her wedding is lucky, for the modes are unusually artistic and becoming. Many of the loveliest gowns are so simply constructed that they can be duplicated at home with very little trouble. There is a wealth of satisfaction in the fact that every article comprising the trousseau was made by yourself or the working personally supervised.

The gem of this collection is the bridal robe, and its delightful simplicity of line should win your admiration immediately. It is developed of ivory-white crepe de chine of the softest quality, and the surplice bodice is unadorned save for the band of bead embroidery bordering the V-shaped opening at the neck. A frill of alencon lace falls against the neck and finishes the three-quarter-length sleeves. A tunic-like overskirt slashed up at the left side and outlined with a band of bead embroidery is softly gathered at the waist line and falls over a foundation of the crepe de chine. The square train is not over eighteen inches long.

Pearl beads which can be purchased at the needlework department of any department store are used for the embroidery. The girdle is formed of softly folded satin, caught at the side with a compact bunch of orange blossoms. A tulle veil, artistically hung from a mobcap of tulle trimmed with a wreath of orange blossoms, completes this stunning costume.

The lovely garden-party frock is developed of white voile and filet lace. On the upper portion of the bodice the material is finely tucked, and below this is stitched the broad band of lace. The sleeves are bordered with the same lace, and from beneath the girdle of madonna-blue silk the gathered skirt falls in straight lines, to be caught up in a modified pannier drapery by a sash of the blue silk tied in a flat bow at the side.

To wear with this frock is a large flat hat of shirred mousseline de soie, with a band of madonna-blue velvet about the crown and the brim garlanded with flowers. The frock could be duplicated in chiffon, crepe de chine or marquisette, and would make a charming bridesmaid's costume.

This season the well-appointed wardrobe must be supplied with a wrap or mantelet of brocaded or flowered silk suitable for wearing over the frock of sheer material. The model given here is of brocaded silk ratine; the flowers are dull pink and blue against an ecru background. A band of dull blue borders the coat, and the wrap is clasped far to the right side with a brilliant buckle, from which hangs loops and ends of black velvet.

The large hat is of leghorn covered with frills of cream lace and adorned with a black ostrich plume and a single pink rose.

Unusually smart is the street costume of white serge; and this model combines beauty of line with extreme mobishness. The white suit is a practical investment for the bride, for it cleans beautifully and can be successfully dyed navy blue, brown or dark violet in the fall. White will be much worn this summer, so make your street costume of white or cream serge.

The chic little jacket is almost a bolero, but the rounded back extends below the waist line, thus excluding it from this class. A broad collar of white silk embroidered in a Persian design contributes a fascinating touch of color to the suit. Two rows of covered bullet buttons and simulated buttonholes adorn the front of the jacket and trim the sleeves. Wide turned-back cuffs, trimmed with the buttons and buttonholes finish the sleeves, and below these extend puffed undersleeves of white mousseline de soie. The straight skirt is trimmed to correspond with the jacket.

A smart hat of dark blue milan straw adorned with a white ostrich plume is worn with this suit.

Of utmost importance is the afternoon gown, and the one pictured here is worthy of your attention. Rose-colored crepe de chine is the material used and the bodice has a vest effect of cream shadow lace. A frill of lace finishes the neck line and sleeves. Coin-shaped buttons adorn the bodice, and a broad sash of rose-colored taffeta, the ends of which are of brilliant blue, girdles the waist. The skirt is two-tiered, each half having an eight-inch hem.

If you prefer another color, choose dull green, tan, mauve, sulphur or blue crepe de chine, voile, marquisette, ratine, crepon or any other soft material. The hat is of pale rose-colored hemp, with a frill of black maline at the edge of the brim and a bouquet of small roses decorating the front.

If you decide to copy these models for your trousseau, you will be thoroughly satisfied with the results. They are a collection of well-selected designs, which can be easily made by the home dressmaker.

FRENCH FASHION NOTES

MONSIEUR ASTRUC is now presenting the opera, "Benvenuto Cellini," in his new Theatre Champs Elysees, and fashionable Paris attended the premiere en masse. Mlle. Vorska and M. Lapelletrie assumed the principal roles, and at the close of the performance the fascinating Russian dancer Pavlowa gave the Dance of the Swans and, as usual, was wonderfully festival.

The exquisite gowns of shimmering satin and diaphanous tulle found a fitting background in this artistic theater.

A Callot gown of unusual beauty was developed of lierre lace. This was tied close to the figure with a crossed drapery of white moire, and a high girdle of the same material confined the folds of lace and tulle forming the bodice. Tucked in at the corsage was a bouquet of pink satin roses.

A great number of white satin gowns with extremely low-cut bodices and long trains were noticed. Exquisite jewels adornes the fair wearers of these gowns, and the headdresses were bands of velvet, jewels or tulle adorned with aigrettes.

The skirts of the evening gowns are no longer draped, but hang in straight graceful lines from the draped bodices. Some show short panniers.

Afternoon gowns grow more elaborate as the season advances, and Madame Paquin's creations are particularly worthy of admiration. From dull blue brocaded crepe de chine she has developed a charming model. The bodice has a V-shaped yoke of tucked linen of the sheerest quality and narrow bands of black velvet outline this; the wide girdle has three flat bows of the velvet in front, caught with square buckles through the center. Wide cuffs of the linen turn back over the long, close-fitting sleeves. The skirt is draped directly in front and at the back. Blue silk stockings and colonial shoes of black patent leather complete this costume.

The basque of chiffon appears on many afternoon gowns, and Drecoll is responsible for a charming gown emphasizing this mode. Over a foundation of cream shadow lace the basque of blue chiffon with a double peplum is worn. It is belted in at the waist with a girdle of sapphire-blue velvet, and from beneath this hangs a long overskirt of lemon-yellow chiffon. Lemon-yellow stockings and blue satin slippers are worn with this creation.

Parisiennes are wearing very low-cut bodices in the daytime, and narrow frills of tulle turning away from the square-cut neck line are the only trimming used on these tightly draped bodices. Sometimes guimpes of tulle or batiste are worn with these low-cut bodices.

Many women who promenade through the Bois wear smart tailored suits of fawn, tan or olive tinted cloth, and there is a decided preference for the small hat. The flat oval shapes of colored straw, with stiff sides and a bow of ribbon velvet directly in front, are the latest offering of the shops on the Rue de la Paix.

Small taffeta turbans are also favored, and these fit closely to the head, having one or two upstanding loops at the left side and a cluster of rosebuds on the right.

The dainty, practical tub frock appears in many phases, and cotton voile, dimity, crepe and handkerchief linen are the materials most used to fashion these favorites. A charming model of striped blue-and-white voile has the blouse gathered to an epaulette yoke. Over this is worn a round collar of sheerest linen and lace. The long, modified bishop sleeves are gathered into a straight cuff, and over this is a turned-back cuff of linen. A tie of dull blue picot-edged ribbon is worn at the throat. Three broad tucks finish the hem of the skirt.

Pale blue crepe is used for another model, and the chemisette is fashioned of finely tucked tulle bordered with narrow frills of valenciennes lace. The long sleeves have a double frill of the lace falling over the hand, and the skirt is perfectly plain save for a deep hem finished at the top with a narrow, upstanding frill of the lace. A sash girdle of dull blue ribbon with a darker blue border is drawn about the waist and knotted at the side.

The scarfs of lace, tulle or chiffon occupy an important place in the evening costume. Bands of satin in the same tone border the edges, and the ends are weighted with fringe or tassels of gold or silver.

Broad girdles of black velvet or satin are conspicuous on white evening gowns, and white satin slippers with black heels and bows of black tulle contribute a chic note to the gown.

Beautiful blouses of darned net trimmed with pleatings of mallines lace are very much favored at present. A touch of colored ribbon is invariably introduced at the neck or girdle.

The coatees of flowered sponge are a pretty complement to the lingerie frock, and the modish woman will supply her summer wardrobe with one of the lovely models displayed.

Bandeaux have returned to favor and are worn well over the forehead and ears. Black velvet bands are edged with a single line of pearls, and tulle bandeaux have huge choux of maline at the side.

Top coats of white sponge, lined with white china silk and having collars and cuffs of white moire, are considered smart.

The collarless gown is practically the only one allowed by fashion, none of the new models having high collars. This should be a welcome fact, as the latter are most uncomfortable in warm weather. The folded net, mousseline de soie or lace folded surplice fashion across the neck is a charming mode and deserves to be fostered.

ELOISE.

What the Dressmaker Wants to Know

TROUSSEAUS occupy almost the entire thoughts and time of the dressmaker just now; but if she aspires to something better than a temporary trade, she must be conversant, at least, with the general fall trend and the most important features to be, for the trousseau that is passe in the autumn will never bring reorders.

The question of color, always so important in dress, becomes of the first moment in the trousseau, as it cannot be settled by fashion, no matter how definite and arbitrary her commands on the subject may be, for the bride-to-be is not content with being smart; she demands to have her beauty and every possible good point made the most of by becoming colors, sometimes even at the expense of fashion.

This is often very perplexing to the dressmaker, but as usual Paris has solved the problem for us by allowing the "intimate" garments to be in the colors most becoming to the individual, while the costume is regulated by the demands of fashion.

The dressmaker has less to do with the former class, with the exception of negligees, jackets and the new fad of lounging or smoking costumes, and in boudoir and undergarments she can preserve a general tone of pink or blue for decided blonde or brunette, or use white with a touch of cherry, lavender, green or whatever the bride's complexion demands to make her as charming as possible, without reference to style at all. There is a decided fad for the use of pinks through all the shades up to red in these models, wherever the coloring of the wearer allows it; but, where it would not be becoming, one sees blue or whatever is called for with equal favor. Generally the entire layout of underwear, lingerie, corsets and negligees is carried out on a foundation of the favorite color, with dainty touches of contrast for variety. The French idea of fitting the boudoir in faint gray or other background color tone is being adopted here with pretty effect in line with this fancy.

In regard to the use of color in outer dress, fashion has already decided upon the main points, and promises not to make any very radical changes, so that the dressmaker may proceed without fear.

For street tailored suits and costumes the use of dark, deep, rich colors will be favored, with trimmings of the same tone, and very generally a touch of some pure and vivid "spot," as the artists have it. This is undoubtedly the result of the prominence which artistic effects have attained in the public mind through the Cubists, for to "spot" or give the correct touch of black or color to a figure is a test of artistic ability. The general tone of street dress promises to be rich and dark.

House and dressy costumes are to be much more highly colored, and the use of bands, edges, buttons, fringe, embroidery and motifs in the Bulgarian or oriental effects will be in great favor. Black with white and a great deal of cut jet and crystal will also be very smart.

Evening toilettes are to be more favored in soft tones of blue, pink, lavender, gray or whatever is fancied. The general effect will be more delicate and less garish than it has been. The same use of rhinestones and other jewels seems settled for another season, and lace will appear lavishly. All white is predicted for extreme favor.

CONCERNING HEALTH and BEAUTY

By MRS. HENRY SYMES

A Splendid Stretching Exercise

The Trowel Strengthens Wrists

The Arms Are Developed

Gather Clover For Clover Tea

Weeding Is Good For the Back

THE way to sit, the way to stand, the way to walk—all these are proper studies for the girl who would be graceful; and what girl is there who would not be graceful? Fresh air and the proper exercise are the two essentials in the quest for grace and beauty, and both may be combined in one sweet dose if you will go a-seeking health among the flowers.

Exercise has its bearing on every phase of health, but in particular its relation to beauty is a matter of grace. The pliant, agile form, the charming carriage, all these are the direct outgrowth of exercise—proper exercise.

So let us go out into the garden and see what we can find in health and beauty among its floral treasures.

To have a garden we must plant and care for the seeds. When the gardener digs up the fresh, moist earth and deposits the tiny seedlings in their little beds, to be nurtured by the great earth-mother until they grow to be beautiful flowers, she should bend from the waist, reaching to the ground while she plants the seeds, straighten up to her full height between each deposit, then bend again for the next one. You can plainly see how this exercise will strengthen her back, her shoulders and her arms.

Now she must cover the seeds, or later, perhaps, loosen the earth around the budding plants. For this she uses a trowel, digging, digging the length of her flower bed, all the while exercising the muscles and tendons in her wrists, her fingers and her forearm.

Almost before she knows it the time has come when roses need attention. Then with her pruning shears, out she goes to clip the blooms and trim off withered leaves and flowers. Unconsciously perhaps, but nevertheless true, she is developing her arms, shoulders and lower limbs as she works amid the fragrant blossoms.

Is she petite?—and does she desire to increase her height? Then she will welcome the time when it becomes necessary to train the clinging vines; for reaching up to tie them in place will surely add inches to her stature, if she does the work systematically, without haste and keeping in mind the fact that she is working for a purpose. When flowers are blooming she will gather them in baskets and distil their fragrance into sweet lotions to aid her in this quest for beauty. Surely her rightful reward for the tender care she has bestowed upon the growing plants.

Rose petals she will gather for potpourri, clover blossoms for tea; lavender flowers and violets will go into the making of toilet accessories, while a good rouge is made by crushing red rose petals in a little pure alcohol or rose extract.

Cherry Lip salve

is made my mixing

Spermacett ointment	1 ounce
Balsam of peru	16 grains
Alkanat root	15 grains
Oil of cloves	6 drops

Heat the alkanat in the spermacett ointment until the latter melts and the whole is a deep rose color. Pass through a strainer, then slightly cool, stirring in the balsam. Let it settle for a few moments, then pour off the clear part and add the oil of cloves. Pour into small pots. It is ready for use as soon as cold.

An excellent mouth wash can be had from Flowerland by taking rectified spirits of wine, 2 ounces; essence of violets, 1 ounce; spirit of peppermint, ½dram.

Mix and bottle. Label—A teaspoonful to a glass of water.

I will give one other recipe, a toilet vinegar, made by mixing lavender flowers, 7 ounces; alcohol, 2 fluid ounces; diluted acetic acid, 58 ounces fluid.

Surely she can find health among the flowers, if she chooses to look for it.

Falling Hair

Dear Mrs. Symes.

Kindly give me the remedy for falling hair. I have had a serious attack of pleuro-pneumonia and my hair is falling out.

CONSTANT READER.

So often after a serious illness the hair falls out at an alarming rate. However, with careful treatment you will be able to improve the condition of yours. Every day spend at least twenty minutes on your head, massaging the scalp and brushing the hair thoroughly. Following is the recipe for a tonic which you should rub into the scalp twice a day:

Cologne	½ ounce
Tincture of cantharides	½ ounce
Oil of English lavender	½ dram
Oil of rosemary	½ dram

Cure for Freckles

Dear Mrs. Symes.

Will you kindly give me a cure other than lemon juice for the removal of freckles?

RUBY.

Following is a recipe which you will find satisfactory:

Obstinate Freckles

Oxide of zinc	½ dram
Subnitrite of bismuth	½ dram
Vaseline	1½ drams
Glycerin	½ dram

Spread the paste upon the freckles at night before going to bed. In the morning remove what remains with a little powdered borax and sweet oil.

For the Hair

Dear Mrs. Symes.

1. My hair is so soft that it will not hold my combs and always looks untidy, although it is clean. It is not dandruff, but it falls out a little. What can I do for it?

2. What is the best way to have the hair? I have had difficulty in getting it curled.

3. Is powder good or bad for the skin?

4. My head aches a great deal of the time. In addition, as I have very little hair to mat, more than the average length, it is shaded and sometimes they crack and the "half-moons" show.

5. What can I do to prevent this?

6. The public think I should wear dark glasses. I read and sew very well, but cannot look at strong lights nor look at any one object too long without my eyes watering. Also get piles frequently.

M. G.

1. If you will spend say, twenty minutes a day massaging the scalp and brushing the hair you will soon see an improvement in its condition. Two or three times a week rub a few drops of castor oil into the scalp.

2. Papers, rags or curlers may be used to curl your hair, but before arranging it on any of these articles it is well to rub fluid made of a tablespoonful of bruised quinine dissolved in a pint of hot water. The water is poured over the seeds and the whole allowed to stand for several hours. The resultant mucilage may then be thinned with a few drops of essence of violet. The hair is moistened with the fluid before curling.

3. Powder of a good quality will not harm the skin if it is entirely removed after it has served its purpose. It will do injury if allowed to clog the pores for too long a time.

4. To keep the nails in good condition it is necessary to spend a little time on them. To prevent them from cracking apply cold cream or vaseline to the cuticle surrounding the nails. It is best to apply this before retiring and allow it to remain on all night. I do not think you will find it necessary to file your nails more than once a week, and at this time a thorough manicure should be given. After the nails are filed the hands should be bathed in warm, soft soapsuds. (If you have some one manicure the nails for you one hand can be soaking while the other is receiving treatment.) When the hands are dried smooth the skin around the nails with a little vaseline, and then, working very carefully, the cuticle is pushed back to reveal the "half moons." To bleach the skin beneath the nails run the orange-wood stick, the point of which has been wrapped in cotton and dipped in peroxide, under the nail. Now dip the hands in warm suds, and after drying them apply a powder or paste and use a buffer. Scrub the nails with a stiff brush and rinse them in clear, cool water. When they have been wiped very dry polish each nail once more with a clean buffer.

If you will push back the cuticle daily with the towel while drying your hands you will not have any trouble with the "half moons."

5. If you wish to increase your weight you must eat foods that build tissue. Drink milk and cocoa; eat cereals and potatoes and deserts made of farina and tapioca and rice. Bread, peas, beans, figs, dates, carrots, fresh eggs, underdone beefsteak are other good foods for the thin person. Avoid food that will not digest easily and be careful to masticate thoroughly what you eat.

Live in the open air as much as possible and be sure to sleep eight or nine hours out of every twenty-four.

6 I advise you to consult an oculist about your eyes. It is evident that they need the attention of a reliable one.

To Thicken the Eyebrows

Dear Mrs. Symes.

What can I do to increase the growth of my eyebrows?

ISABELLE.

Effective results have been gained in many cases by rubbing into the brows every day melted vaseline. Always wipe the eyebrows from the nose out and never in the opposite direction.

A Shiny Face

Dear Mrs. Symes.

Will you kindly tell me what I can do for a shiny face?

ETHEL.

Use the lotion for which I am giving the recipe:

Boracic acid	1 dram
Rosewater	4 ounces

Mix. Apply the lotion as often as necessary.

Camphor Ice

Dear Mrs. Symes.

Please give me the recipe for making camphor ice.

MAUD.

Camphor ice is made of:

Refined mutton or lamb tallow	2 ounces
A piece of gum camphor as large as an English walnut.

Melt together, stir until they are thoroughly mixed and allow to cool.

Round Shoulders

Dear Mrs. Symes.

My daughter has round shoulders, but I think this is because she sleeps on a large pillow. Do you agree with me?

ANXIOUS MOTHER.

I am sure the large pillow is responsible for the bent shoulders. Have your daughter discard the large pillow and substitute one filled with thin hair. She should be careful not to lie in a crouched position. It is also important that she practice deep breathing in the fresh air.

Oily Hair

Dear Mrs. Symes.

Will you please give me a formula for oily hair?

SARAH.

A good formula for oily hair consists of:

Alcohol	2 ounces
Witch hazel	2 ounces
Resorcin	12 grains

Use daily, rubbing well into the scalp.

A Delicate Sachet

Dear Mrs. Symes.

Will you please give me the recipe for a delicate sachet, also one for a half-curling lotion?

MADGE.

Following are the two recipes you desire:

Violet Sachet Powder

Powdered orris	1 ounce
Powdered bergamot peel	¼ ounce
Powdered acacia	¼ ounce
Musk	20 grains

Mix thoroughly. Bottle for ten days, when it is ready for use.

Hair-Curling Lotion

Potassium carbonate	120 grains
Ammonia water	1 fluid dram
Alcohol	12 fluid drams
Rosewater enough to make	16 fluid ounces.

In using, moisten the hair, adjust it loosely and it will curl upon drying.

To Reduce the Hips

Dear Mrs. Symes.

Kindly tell me what exercise I may practice to reduce the hips.

THELMA.

Rolling over and over on a large floor while wearing loose clothing will reduce the hips. Another splendid exercise for this purpose is to lie extended upon the floor, supporting yourself by one hand, while the other is placed upon the hip. While holding this position raise the body gradually from the floor until the whole weight is supported by the hand and feet. It is comparatively easy to get the body from the floor as far as the knees, but to bring it up to the full extent is not easy at first. It should be tried first on one side and then on the other. When beginning this exercise you should be careful to get used to it gradually.

Hands Are Rough

Dear Mrs. Symes.

After I wash my hands they feel so rough. What can I do to soften the skin?

A READER.

First of all it may be well to change the brand of soap you are using. Next, be careful to dry your hands thoroughly after they have been washed. Then apply a cold cream or almond oil to the hands.

To Remove Vermin

Dear Mrs. Symes.

Will you please tell me what to do to remove vermin from my little girl's head?

Her hair is so coarse. What can be done to make it fine?

UNSIGNED.

Following is the recipe for a mixture which you may use on your daughter's head:

Cut a cake of bichloride of mercury soap into halves and shave one half into fine bits. Dissolve it in boiling water. You may set the mixture on the stove over a gentle heat if you choose. Yet I prefer a water form of sublike mixture when cold.

The following lotion may be used after a thorough washing with the foregoing preparation:

Tincture staphisagre	3 ounces
Bay rum	3 ounces

Not much can be done to change the texture of her hair, but you can make it luxuriant and give it a pretty gloss by massaging her scalp and brushing her hair daily.

Brittle Nails

Dear Mrs. Symes.

1. I used to bite my nails, but have been told that a good cure for them is to wear a ring. Still they are fat. Please tell me what to do to make them pretty? What can I do to stop the habit entirely?

2. I have been using a certain kind of cream, but now I find pimples under the skin of my arms. Do you think the cream has caused them to appear?

3. Are you using a lotion of rosewater, glycerin and lemon juice, a recipe you once gave, but have been told that one will tan quicker by using it. Is that true?

4. About four years ago my toe was operated on and the bone scraped. Since the nail has come back there seems to be a corn under the nail. There is a very bad ingrowing nail on the same toe. I have cut away a great deal of the nail, but it soon grows over and have cut a notch in the center of the nail. Will this help?

5. I have a friend who is very fleshy. Inches tall. He wishes to be two inches taller. Can you tell me of some exercise to make him taller?

CARMEN.

1. To make your nails less brittle you should soak them in warm olive oil for five minutes every day. At night apply cold cream to the nails and the cuticle surrounding them. Wear loose, clean gloves to bed so that the clothes will not be soiled. Since you have failed to shape your nails properly it would be well for you to visit a manicure once or twice. Watch the movements so that you may know how to treat the nails yourself.

2. I do not think the cream is responsible for the pimples. The best treatment for them is to apply cloths wrung from hot water, and then clean the skin with a brush, soap and hot water. Rinse the skin thoroughly with clean, cold water and apply alcohol. The white masses are possibly small collections of sebaceous matter which might have been caught under the horny epidermis and have dried into hard masses.

3. The lotion removes rather than encourages tan.

4. The first thing you should do to remedy an ingrown nail is to wear shoes that fit properly. The next step is to cut the nail correctly. You made a mistake when cutting the corners of your nails. The toenail should be cut in a concave form, the outer nails projecting beyond the toe. If there is a tendency for the flesh to grow over the nail, the flesh should be pushed back and fastened in this position with a strip of oxide of zinc plaster, and a gauze packing should be inserted under the nail edge. A saturated solution of boric acid serves as an antiseptic dressing.

For a corn beneath a nail you should receive treatment of a competent chiropodist.

6. Stretching exercises increase the height somewhat. An exercise where the muscles are stretched is to stand erect and raise the fingers as high above the head as possible. Then lower the arms until you can touch the floor with the palms of the hands, bending at the waist line and not at the knees.

Dry Skin

Dear Mrs. Symes.

Please tell me what I can do for my face, which scales.

G. D. F.

It is evident that your skin is too dry. You should be very careful in your selection of soaps. In fact, it may be well for you to discontinue the use of any soap for a while. I advise you to apply almond oil to the face once or twice a day. This may be applied with a soft cloth or a bit of absorbent cotton. Take a fresh supply to remove what oil the skin has not absorbed.

ADVICE ON SOCIAL CUSTOMS

Mrs Chester Adams will cordially invites for friends to bring to her these Social Problems and Perplexities by letter at any time

[If a personal reply is desired, a self-addressed stamped envelope should be inclosed.]

WEDDING GIFTS

AS SOON as an invitation to a wedding is received a wedding gift is sent by a friend. Close friends are at liberty to send gifts before that time, but it is better for acquaintances or those who enjoy a formal social friendship to wait for an invitation, not as a matter of calculation, but because delicacy forbids the sending of a gift to one who has not included the sender in her list. A gift in this instance would almost be asking for an invitation.

When wedding cards are issued for the church ceremony only, there is no obligation to send a gift, especially if the recipient of the wedding card be a formal acquaintance. A friend can send a gift in this instance if he wishes. After all, the heartfelt, sincere wish back of a gift is the thing which counts. No bride with self-respect and refinement wishes to join the ranks of highway social robbers and collect presents from strangers at the presentation of her engraved wedding card.

There is no limitation with regard to price in the matter of a wedding gift. Do not be foolish and spend your week's salary because you wish to send a gift that will rival a well-to-do donor, who is spending far less in proportion to her income than you are. Let good taste be a feature of your present. And exercise wisdom in choosing. Do not send a cut-glass olive dish to a girl who will not have her own home, and do not give a gold clock to one who despises gilt in all its forms.

A very fine middle course between sending nothing and giving a present to a slight acquaintance is the sending of a bouquet of flowers with a card bearing your congratulations to the bride on her wedding day.

If you are in mourning, presents are sent, although you will not be able to be present at either the ceremony or reception. If you are abroad or traveling at a great distance from the scene of the wedding, you should commission some one to see that a gift is sent.

Gifts are presented in person by only the intimate friends and relatives of the bride. Others send by special messenger or by the service of the store at which the present is purchased is the usual way. A visiting card with a kindly sentiment or a phrase of congratulations penciled beneath the name should be inclosed with any gift.

Wedding presents which are marked or engraved are stamped with the initials of the bride's maiden name.

If for any reason you have delayed sending a gift, an explanatory note should accompany the present, which you can send to the bride at her new home.

A little note expressing your wishes for the bride's happiness is always appreciated, and no one is too poor or too busy to write this even if a present be beyond thought. It is always a kind and thoughtful act and an expression of good breeding.

When a husband and wife send a joint gift, a joint visiting card should be inclosed.

This should clear up some ideas about gifts for bridal or wedding. I shall talk next week on the wedding guest, and till then I shall say goodby.

Solutions to Social Problems

Registering at a Hotel

DEAR Mrs. Adams.

Is it incorrect for a woman to accompany her husband to a hotel to register?

E. D. F.

A wife should not accompany her husband when he registers at a hotel. She should wait for him in the parlor or reception room until he has made all arrangements for both.

Replying to an Invitation

Dear Mrs. Adams.

Will you kindly tell me whether I may send my visiting card in answer to an engraved invitation to a dance?

S. D.

Do not send your card, but write your reply on note paper, expressing your regrets or acceptance in the third person.

The Correspondence Card

Dear Mrs. Adams.

What correspondence is the correspondence card used for? Should the heading and salutation and the "Very truly yours" be the same as when regular letter paper is used? Is it proper to write on both sides of the card? Should it be used only in an envelope to match.

UNSIGNED.

The correspondence card is used for informal notes. For this reason the regular heading need not be used nor should the formal conclusion such as you suggest be used. The name and city and the date should be written. One may write on both sides of the card, which should be put in an envelope of the same size.

Paying Carfare

Dear Mrs. Adams.

Will you kindly advise me if when I meet a girl on a suburban trolley where the fare is rather large should I pay her fare?

J. A. C.

Under the circumstances you mention it is not necessary for you to pay the young woman's carfare.

Extending Thanks

Dear Mrs. Adams.

Will you kindly tell me if it is proper to thank a man for helping a girl to get on her car? Also, should I thank a ranger for holding a door open for her?

D. C.

In both cases thanks should be extended.

The Bridegroom's Dress

Dear Mrs. Adams.

Will you please tell me if it is necessary for the bridegroom to wear full dress at 4 o'clock in the afternoon? The bride is to wear an exquisite lace wedding gown.

IN DOUBT.

No; the correct dress for the bridegroom at an afternoon wedding is the same that he would wear at a morning wedding: frock coat, white vest, gray or black trousers, light gray necktie and light gloves.

Entering and Leaving the Car

Dear Mrs. Adams.

When a man and woman enter and leave a street car, who should go first?

S. S. S.

On entering the car the woman precedes, but when leaving the car the man precedes.

A Bride's Suit

Dear Mrs. Adams.

When a bride is married in a coat suit is she allowed to have a bridesmaid?

ANXIOUS.

Yes; it is necessary that the bridesmaid should wear a coat suit also.

The Signature

Dear Mrs. Adams.

How should a married woman sign her name to a note written to an acquaintance?

P.

She should sign her own Christian name with her husband's surname. When writing to strangers or persons who do not know that you are married you should write your husband's full name preceded by "Mrs." in the lower left-hand corner of your note.

Puts Him Off

Dear Mrs. Adams.

After taking a girl home from a theater I tried to speak with engagement with her to call, but she told me to call her up in a few days. I did so, but was unable again to make an engagement, and was again told to call up after several days. I am under the impression that this girl does not care for me in the least, otherwise she would not put me off this way. What do you think about it?

AN ANXIOUS INQUIRER.

I think I should come to the same conclusion as yours. Wait a week or two and try your luck again. If you are given the same answer as before, do not make any further attempts to see her.

Inviting Him to Dance

Dear Mrs. Adams.

My class in high school is to give a dance. There is a young man I should like to invite as my partner, but I hesitate to ask him because I know him only slightly. He is the only one I care to invite. He is not a member of the class. Would it be proper for me to purchase the tickets?

L. W. G.

If you are allowed to invite non-members to the dance and you know the young man in question would prove a desirable partner, send him an invitation. Under the circumstances you should purchase the tickets.

Eight Queries

Dear Mrs. Adams.

1. What is the proper manner to introduce one's sister to a young man?

2. When taking a young woman to a theater is it customary to bring her flowers or candy?

3. Should she take same to the theater or leave them at the door?

4. At a dance how long should a young man remain with his partner after each dance is over?

5. When crossing a street with a young woman should a man voluntarily assist her or merely offer his arm to her?

7. Some time ago I met a young lady. We have passed several times since on the street; she merely looks at me as if she were afraid to take the initiative. Should I take it or wait for her to speak first?

8. How should a man take leave of his partner after a dance?

A CONSTANT READER.

1. A girl should not be introduced to a man. The order is reversed. The proper way to do this is to say, "Hazel, this is Mr. Jones, of whom you have heard me speak so often."

2. Whichever is most convenient. The person who is right-handed will usually assist with the right hand.

3. Yes; although it is not compulsory to do so.

4. The flowers may be worn, but the candy should not be taken to the theater.

5. Until the music for the next dance begins.

6. This assistance is not always necessary. When it is, a man should offer his arm to her.

7. According to the rules of propriety, she should be the first to show signs of recognition.

8. By saying, "Please excuse me. I must find the girl who has promised me this dance."

Registering at a Hotel

Dear Mrs. Adams.

I am desirous of knowing if it is correct for a man to register as Mr. and Mrs. John E. Brown, or should he register as John E. Brown and wife. If both are correct, which one is used the most?

What color tie should the bridegroom wear with a full dress suit when the wedding ceremony is performed at the parsonage?

JIMMIE.

Mr. and Mrs. John E. Brown is the correct form of registering.

If the ceremony takes place in the morning or afternoon, a pearl or light-colored ascot or four-in-hand tie may be worn. In the evening a bow of black or black and white may be worn. Of course, when full evening dress is worn a white tie is proper.

Invitation to a Musicale

Dear Mrs. Adams.

Is it proper to send invitations for a musicale in single or double envelopes?

E. D. F.

Invitations to very formal musicales are sent in double envelopes. Less formal invitations may be in the form of visiting cards. On the left-hand corner of the latter should be written the date, the hour and the name of the musician or orchestra.

Giving the Bride Away

Dear Mrs. Adams.

At a home wedding where the bride is an orphan, what does the male relative who gives her away do or say?

RELATIVE.

The man escorts the bride to the place before the minister. When the clergyman inquires, "Who giveth this woman to this man?" the relative advancing between the bride and bridegroom, takes the bride's right hand, lays it in that of the bridegroom, bowing his acquiescence as he murmurs "I do."

For the INDUSTRIOUS NEEDLEWOMAN

By ADELAIDE BYRD

For A Nightgown

DESIGNED BY ANNA L. LOOS

WHICH of you does not admire exquisite underwear? And if true to your embroidery ability and leisure time, which has not in the precious lingerie department at home a special set for special occasions such as visiting?

Well, here is a design for a nightgown which speaks for itself. The bowknots and daisies form a lovely combination which I know you will like. The motif is shown for the top of the sleeves, and when tracing it the scallops should be continued along the curved line of the kimono pattern. The neck line is shown in one-half of its curve. When continuing the line make the back half more shallow. One scallop traced and applied around the line will help you to fill the circle in a very short time. The eyelets are placed at the same equal distances around the back of the top.

Use a soft mercerized cotton for your embroidery, and pad the bowknots before working in solid stitch across the ribbon. Work the knot in solid stitch, and the thin lines at the end of the loops to represent the edge of the ribbon should be outlined.

Fill in the space with punched work. A tapestry needle or a coarse needle does the work satisfactorily. Punch through the holes in parallel rows, joining every two dots. When passing to the row below, use a diagonal line on the wrong side of the material. When you have finished the rows in horizontal lines, complete the work by working vertically in the same way. Four lines of threads should radiate from each hole. The frequent punching through the material gives an openwork effect at the end. If you wish to introduce color at these parts, use colored thread.

The use of lace or net instead of punched work is also a fine idea. Baste the valenciennes or filet over the bowknot. Work in solid stitch as suggested and cut away the material from underneath. Trim the edges of the lace on the right side. In the final laundering these will shrink to nothing, leaving a lacy medallion effect that is exquisite.

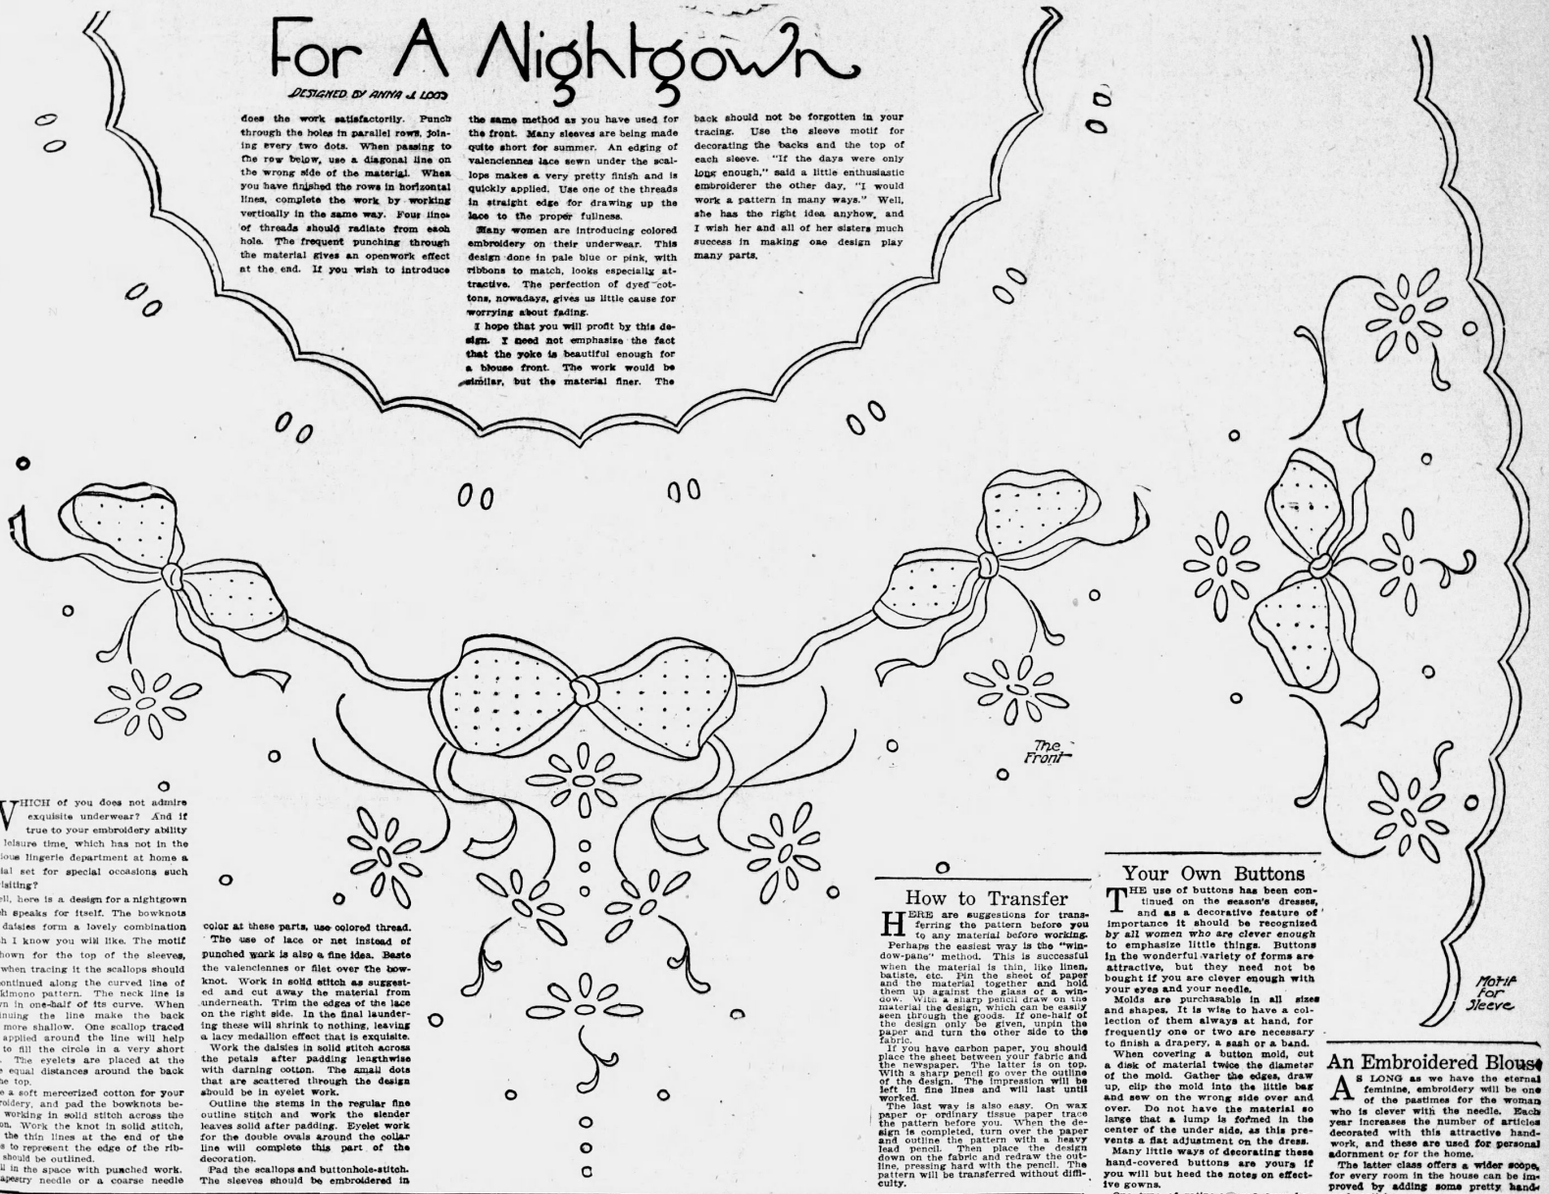
Work the daisies in solid stitch across the petals after padding lengthwise with darning cotton. The small dots that are scattered through the design should be in eyelet work.

Outline the stems in the regular fine outline stitch and work the slender leaves solid after padding. Eyelet work for the double ovals around the collar line will complete this part of the decoration.

Pad the scallops and buttonhole-stitch. The sleeves should be embroidered in the same method as you have used for the front. Many sleeves are being made quite short for summer. An edging of valenciennes lace sewn under the scallops makes a very pretty finish and is quickly applied. Use one of the threads in straight edge for drawing up the lace to the proper fullness.

Many women are introducing colored embroidery on their underwear. This design done in pale blue or pink, with ribbons to match, looks especially attractive. The perfection of dyed cottons, nowadays, gives us little cause for worrying about fading.

I hope that you will profit by this design. I need not emphasize the fact that the yoke is beautiful enough for a blouse front. The work would be similar, but the material finer. The back should not be forgotten in your tracing. Use the sleeve motif for decorating the backs and the top of each sleeve. "If the days were only long enough," said a little enthusiastic embroiderer the other day, "I would work a pattern in many ways." Well, she has the right idea anyhow, and I wish her and all of her sisters much success in making one design play many parts.



How to Transfer

HERE are suggestions for transferring the pattern before you to any material before working.

Perhaps the easiest way is the "window-pane" method. This is successful when the material is thin, like linen, batiste, etc. Pin the sheet of paper and the material together and hold them up against the glass of a window. With a sharp pencil draw on the material the design, which can be easily seen through the goods. If one-half of the design only be given, unpin the paper and turn the other side to the fabric.

If you have carbon paper, you should place the sheet between your fabric and the newspaper. The latter is on top. With a sharp pencil go over the outline of the design. The impression will be left in fine lines and will last until worked.

The last way is also easy. On wax paper or ordinary tissue paper trace the pattern before you. When the design is completed, turn over the paper and outline the pattern with a heavy lead pencil. Then place the design down on the fabric and redraw the outline, pressing hard with the pencil. The pattern will be transferred without difficulty.

Your Own Buttons

THE use of buttons has been continued on the season's dresses, and as a decorative feature of importance it should be recognized by all women who are clever enough to emphasize little things. Buttons in the wonderful variety of forms are attractive, but they need not be bought if you are clever enough with your eyes and your needle.

Molds are purchasable in all sizes and shapes. It is wise to have a collection of them always at hand, for frequently one or two are necessary to finish a drapery, a sash or a band.

When covering a button mold, cut a disk of material twice the diameter of the mold. Gather the edges, draw up, clip the mold into the little bag and sew on the wrong side over and over. Do not have the material so large that a lump is formed in the center of the under side, as this prevents a flat adjustment on the dress.

Many little ways of decorating these hand-covered buttons are yours, if you will but heed the notes on effective gowns.

One type of ratine-covered form has a double row of stitches around the edge, made of coarse silk in two colors. This gives a beautiful effect.

French knots, made before the molds are covered, are easily applied, and in either one color or a combination of shades make quick decoration.

The spider web is a covering which is made as you have no doubt frequently worked in the renaissance work so much in vogue years ago.

On the covered mold make crossed lines that resemble spokes of a wheel, catch the lines of thread together at the center by knotting the thread and weave the remaining thread under and over the spokes, going around the center until you have formed a solid woven disk as large as you wish.

Net or lace covering satin molds of a contrasting color makes a lovely background for quick embroidery. One exquisite model of flowered voile has a girdle of tapestry-blue silk and a new guimpe. Buttons are made of blue silk, covered with net and embroidered in pink-and-blue floss in flowers to echo the blossoms scattered over the voile. Any flower idea can be carried out in this way.

Square buttons, covered and embroidered in solid stitch so that a square on the diagonal forms the center, are very new. Conventional forms are easily embroidered, if you take the weave of the goods for a guide. Sometimes the pattern of the material will give an excellent background which you can work in solid colors and have an expensive disk for a few minutes' work.

Tiny buttons, covered with taffeta or satin and shaped to resemble berries, are made by gathering a disk over a pad of raw cotton, sewing and attaching to twisted silk for the stems. These are applied as if they grew on a running vine, the twisted silk threads forming the stem.

These hints should prove an impetus to the home dressmaker who can follow a suggestion to its embroidery finish.

An Embroidered Blouse

AS LONG as we have the eternal feminine, embroidery will be one of the pastimes for the woman who is clever with the needle. Each year increases the number of articles decorated with this attractive handwork, and these are used for personal adornment or for the home.

The latter class offers a wider scope, for every room in the house can be improved by adding some pretty handmade article.

For instance, the living room of one furnished with craftsman or brown willow furniture should have draperies, cushions, a table runner and couch cover to harmonize. Material suitable for this purpose is pongee, scrim, linen, casement cloth or Bagdad linen in rich tones of tan, green or brown. The most artistic window draperies for a room of this type are in the straight curtains hanging at either side of the window frame. If you desire to make the draperies especially attractive, finish the edge with a hemstitched border. Above this embroider a design in pine cones or dogwood. The table runner, cushions and couch cover should be made to correspond.

For the dining room the energetic needlewoman should make scarfs, draperies and a tablecover. Suitable material for this purpose would be scrim, madras or shantung silk of a white or cream tone. On this stamp a conventional tulip, iris, daisy or poppy design and embroider with delft blue, yellow or green, according to the color used in the room.

Any pretty flower designs can be used to decorate the bedrooms, and they may be embroidered or stenciled. The design used on the scarfs, draperies, cushions and bedspread should match as nearly as possible that appearing in the wallpaper. To cut the design from flowered cretonne and applique them to the scrim, madras, dimity or casement cloth is another charming decoration for the bedroom.

The veranda during the summer months is as comfortably furnished as many living rooms, and here again the needlewoman has ample opportunity to display her art. The cover for the porch swing, cushions for the chairs and the tablecover should be made of some durable wash material and adorned with embroidery.

There are many simple conventional designs which are rapidly embroidered and are as effective as more elaborate ones.

A visit to the needlework shops will furnish you with ideas enough to keep you busy during the entire summer.

THE LATEST THING IN CHEMISETTES

A Guimpe of Lace — Of Crepe de Chine — Embroidered Net — Bulgarian Embroidery Introduced

THIS season one of the features emphasized by fashion is the chemisette of sheer white material. Scarcely a frock appears without its yoke of shadow lace or net. As a rule, these are detachable, for they become soiled very quickly, therefore require frequent laundering. If the chemisette is separate from the frock it is extremely practical, and it is a wise plan to have an assortment of guimpes and chemisettes. Many attractive designs appear in the shops, and these can be easily copied by the clever woman who sews.

One of the loveliest chemisettes is of white net embroidered with the Bulgarian colors.

Purchase net of a firm quality and fit it perfectly to the neck. About the bottom place a band of white elastic to hold it tightly about the waist. Stitch a finely tucked strip down the front and embroider the design in red, blue, yellow and black. The base of the collar is adorned in the same manner. Fine white net is used for another chemisette, and this has a simple little design embroidered in dark blue and white on the collar and front of the chemisette.

These chemisettes of net are especially cool and give a neat appearance to the neck. A smart little chemisette is fashioned of white crepe de chine joined to a strip of strong net.

Beneath a hemstitched fold stitch a graduated pleating of the crepe de chine and cover three small button molds with the crepe de chine to adorn the front. Finish the top of the collar with a pleating of crepe de chine. If desired the neck can be made low and finished with a pleating.

Should your frock require a guimpe with long sleeves, purchase shadow lace and plain white net. First fit the net perfectly and over this place the shadow lace and cut the net from beneath.

Stitch two narrow pleatings of plain net down the front and sew a line of small black-covered buttons from the collar to the end of the lace.

Make the lower portion of the sleeves of the shadow lace either of the full bishop type or closely fitted to the arm. Shadow lace can be had from fifty cents to three dollars a yard, and being wide a very small amount is required for a chemisette or guimpe. If you embroider well, many attractive touches of handwork can be added to your guimpes of net with a very little expenditure of time or money.

Supply your wardrobe with a variety of chemisettes, for the summer weather demands a fresh one each day.

Paris Women Advocating Standard Fashions

By Mary Buel

PARIS. — [Special Correspondence.] — Is France to have another revolution? That is one of the questions of the moment, for if it is this one will be as far reaching in its effects as have been any of the other upheavals. All one needs to say is that it will have to do with dress and that its instigators and participants will be women to give an idea of its scope and possible results.

There is in Paris a little body of women who call themselves "Feminists of France," and the society includes ladies of fashion, beauties of the stage, literary lights, and wits. Their latest theory, and one that has attracted widespread attention, is to taboo clothes. Not, of course, entirely, but just enough to give themselves the excitement of doing something new and strange, for strange it certainly sounds to hear French women, and Parisians at that, rail against fashions and offer to sacrifice themselves upon the altar of shabby gowns and last season's hats. This is what they are doing, with the results to be heard from.

At a smart conference held a few days ago in the salon of one of the leaders of society here, the fair speaker of the occasion gave her views and those of her associates. She said in substance, as nearly as can be remembered, that women thought too much of clothes and therefore not enough of their minds and persons; that old and much worn costumes emphasized the beauty of the feminine body and face as they gave for comfort and freedom of the former and lack of thought for the latter; that when women vied with one another for new and gorgeous raiment, then the expression of the features underwent a change and they were no longer soft, calm, and beautiful. Dress, she contended, should be considered in the same class as architecture, the older the better, and older in form and lines as well as in usage. By this she meant that a costume built on classical lines, much and often worn, should occupy the same place in fashions as does a temple of the ancient Greeks, which has been softened and mellowed by time.

Hats, too, came into her consideration of the subject, for these she thought should be selected possibly three times during a woman's life, and always with regard to her age, complexion, and circumstances. If accidents should happen, or winds and rains of weather should beat too severely upon these thought out creations, then let them be recreated, but always following the same form and general style.

There was an hour's talk on this same theme, delivered charmingly and with much vivacity. The speaker was frequently applauded and after finishing warmly congratulated. Everything she had said was indorsed by the influential dames present, all of whom promised support in the carrying out of the "new idea."

The only incongruity in the entire affair, which possibly did not obtrude itself upon the participants, was the fact that the eloquent lecturer was wearing a frock that probably came from Paquin or Callot, of the latest style, chic and becoming in its every detail, and that her hat represented the last cry in millinery efforts, and that the audience likewise might easily have posed for a fashion journal, so up to date and wholly smart were their entire costumes. Details such as these were tactfully ignored by these lovely ladies, who were all enthusiasm for the "cause" of reform in dress, and if a rank outsider had the misfortune to notice them —well, she might easily be accused of having a frivolous mind and no desire to be uplifted.

We are in the midst now of the gayest, most rollicking, most devil may care sort of fashions that Paris, or any other place, has seen in many a long day. Nothing is serious and demure as it was during the vogue of the short plain skirt and the dainty lace trimmed bodice, neither be it starchy and gorgeous, as when two years ago we went back to the middle ages and were clothed in gowns of splendid fabrics, rich with jeweled embroideries and golden ornaments. There is nothing of that sort to be seen now, nothing of demureness, of stateliness, nor of splendor, but instead there is plenty that is joyous, coquettish, and charming, bright colors, unexpected combinations of materials and styles and stuffs, and trimmings that are so pretty that one simply can't resist them. Paris is no place at present for the woman with quiet tastes and decided ideas on the matter of clothes, for she will have difficulty in having them carried out, or more likely still, she will succumb to the fascination of gay colors and become as light minded as the Parisians apparently are.

Satin continues to be liked for evening wear, or occasionally brocbed, but either of these is only used for the skirt and possibly the high girdle, the remainder of the bodice invariably being of lace, chiffon, or transparent tulle. Except for the color there is a great deal of sameness about these gowns, this being sometimes relieved by a sash of a daring shade or by a bit of brilliant embroidery or bead work. This last seems to grow in popularity and is used in many ways where one would the least expect it.

Vivid green and a gorgeous shade of cerise, or perhaps geranium would be more exact, are the two colors that seem to have caught the favor of the best dressed women, and both are generally seen combined with white and black and often with a flaming orang tint. It is these wonderful shades and splashes of contrast that give character to most of the gowns for evening and to make a variety in these must tax the ingenuity and cleverness of the most skilled couturier.

The prettiest frocks that I have seen lately have been made with the skirt of one fabric and the bodice or coat of another. At the races these have been the most striking of any of the costumes worn and I am sure the most admired. As a rule the skirts are kept plain, that is plain as to color, for otherwise they are draped, or plaited, or drawn up about the knees or at the bottom in a dozen different ways. Black and white skirts both are seen, for with these two colors any shade or combination of shades may be effectively used.

By white nowadays is meant a tone of cream or ivory that is delightful when used with brilliant tints, being far less glaring than white. At last Sunday's race I saw a gown of this shade, the skirt being satin, the deep ivory tint making it look particularly heavy and soft. It was gathered up in big foids in the center of the front, the fastening being made just below the knees under a soft chou. The lower part of the skirt was also turned under irregularly and not pressed down, giving it a novel appearance.

The coat, of printed chiffon, a combination of rich purple, red, and blue on a background of soft yellow, had its lower edge treated in the same manner, and as it was Russian blouse in shape it reached midway between the waist and knees. The upper part was loose and baggy and this disclosed a tiny waistcoat, upper part of the neck, and undersleeves, all of white tulle. The much folded girdle was black, with two short ends at the left side and tucked into the belt in front was a cluster of bright red flowers made of silk and velvet.

These little bouquets, by the way, are being worn with a lot of gowns, put into the waist band, catching the end of a tulle fichu, or fastening a lace jabot, and they are always bright and gay and look perfectly darling against any sort of background.

Fly away is what one would say in describing most of the little coats or blouse bodices that are being worn. They hang loosely under the arms, are generally cut away in front, or if not they fasten with a single button, but so loosely that one wonders if they will keep in place. Most of them have skirt effects, at any rate in the back, and they have short waists and enormously wide belts that are also so loose they can scarcely be called belts. They are made of colored silks or of colored cottons, as the case may be, and they all have any amount of filmy lace or tulle ruffles, standing up or falling down about the throat and finishing the long sleeves.

Gown of white silk crepe, with a straight and narrow skirt. Just below the waist line is a sash of the same, which is put on quite plainly and is finished with two straight ends in the back. The bodice of crepe shows four openings, two in front and two in the back, beginning at the waist and extending half way up. These openings are filled in with black chiffon embroidered in white. The kimono sleeves are of black chiffon with a little embroidery worked in white about the wrists. The chemisette and plaited collar are of white tulle. Model from Premet.

Gown having a skirt of heavy striped tussore in brown and pale beige color. It is made close about the hips and has a broad front, with a row of beige crochet buttons on either side. The lower part of the skirt is draped on either side, but well toward the back. The coat is of brown ribbed silk and is worn over a soft, plain blouse of beige chiffon. The coat is edged about the neck with beige satin and there is a little ruffle of white lace and a lace chemisette to be seen in front. The sleeves have lace ruffles, which extend nearly to the elbows. Model from Redfern.

The hat is new in shape and is made of fine black chip, with extremely narrow brim. There is a narrow band of black velvet about the crown, with bows over the ears and strings of the same. Model from Georette.

Next to the importance of these little colored coats come the colored blouses, which are worn with all plain or even striped skirts. These are frequently made of brocbe and fit the figure loosely, opening in front over tulle waistcoats or lace chemisettes. There are two distinct styles in these, one being basque shaped and the other being provided with a broad and decorative sash.

The blouses that are finished with sashes are of a simpler style, but they in a way are newer than the others and are considered smart. The blouse itself is like an ordinary shirtwaist, but it always fastens in front and generally has plaitings of tulle or lace, which trim the neck and front and finish the sleeves.

The bayadere sash is quite a distinct feature, and this, by the way, can only be worn by some one with a slim figure. It is made of the material of the blouse, which, of course, must be supple, and it is very wide. The sash is folded about the waist, beginning in the front, and is drawn down well over the hips. It crosses in the back, still retaining its long waisted effect, and is then brought to the front, where it is knotted almost at the point of the knee, and then hangs in two ends, these usually being finished with heavy tassels.

Both these blouses and the coats mentioned are certain to be in fashion all the coming summer, for not only are they pretty and smart but they are especially useful, a quality that does not as a rule commend itself to the Parisian.

Anything more becoming than the chin strap hat could not be possible, and why women do not keep to this style permanently is a question that should be asked of them. It is worn with every shape and style of hat, big, little, and medium, and consists of nothing more than a narrow band of black velvet ribbon, fastened just under the brim of the hat. It outlines the face delightfully, and although I have seen these same chin straps made of tulle, of tiny garlands of flowers, and even of strings of pearls, nothing as chic as velvet ribbon has as yet been discovered.

It is not time for any pronounced changes in millinery, but these are sure to come later with the advent of warm summer weather. Then it is predicted that the picture hat will again be with us, possibly in a modified form, for the rage for really huge head coverings has quite gone out, but the coming mode will depict quaint, and odd rather than sentimental styles, which, of course, will be more in the picture with gowns and wraps. At any rate they have not arrived yet, so one can only wait and see.

Gown of white brocbe crepe de chine, the design being large. The skirt is fulled into the waist band, back and front alike, and has wedge shaped openings on either side, which extend from the waist just over the hips. The same material is plaited into these openings. Just below the knees the skirt is encircled by a wide black velvet ribbon, this finishing at the left side of the front with a huge bow and two long ends. The girdle is also of black velvet. The kimono sleeves are usually large and really form a part of the bodice, being plaited underneath the front and back. The chemisette is of white chiffon, laid in, bodice is unusual. Model from Redfern.

HOW HOME ECONOMIES ARE TAUGHT IN FLORIDA STATE COLLEGE

Cooking Is Only One of Many Features of Course in Which Young Ladies Are Taught How to Care for Home and Household. Latest Methods of Science Are Adopted by Instructors

Young women of the Florida State college, at Tallahassee, have joined the canning club and take great interest in the work. The above pictures show some of the college maids at their work on the college campus, canning tomatoes under the direction of Miss Agnes Harris, instructor in domestic science.

Students Learn Comparative Values of All Foods and in Addition to Actual Demonstration Splendid Mail Course Is Offered and the Work of Extension Carried On

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 7.—No feature of the commencement week of the Florida State College for Women was of greater interest to a larger number than the exhibit given Tuesday by the home economic department, which included also the can club demonstration.

The science of cooking is generally conceived by the great many who have not seen one of these exhibitions to be the only subject dealt with, but such is far from the correct idea of what is embraced in the four-year course. During the past year 120 pupils were enrolled in the economics department, ninety-two of them taking cooking and a number in addition to the cooking class work took sewing. The first year course includes cooking and sewing; the second year embraces advanced cooking and elementary dressmaking; the third year course hold chemistry and advanced dressmaking and millinery; the fourth year, dietetics and household management.

There is small doubt that these terms mean less than nothing to the business man who frowns over his leather-sole steak at dinner, but they would mean much to him if the lady of the house had been given the advantage of a course of this kind, where they actually bake ice cream and within whose precincts the commodity of tough meat is not known. There is the process of air emission, scientifically known in cooking for only a few years, which makes it possible to convert a cake of ice cream into a more delicious dainty than was known to the confectioner a few years ago.

The cream which is placed on a flat sponge cake which in turn rests upon a plank is covered over with beaten egg in a manner to retain an air tight covering over the cream and the plank is run into the stove; in a few minutes it is taken out. The plank and the cake are hot, and the egg frosting is turned a tempting brown, but the cream between is still delightfully cold and unmelted. The tough beef is treated in a way which causes it to become juicily tender, and in every way that one could think of the young woman is taught to become a competent, efficient, tactful, helpful executive manager of the home.

ALL VALUES SHOWN.

The value of food and not only that but the comparative values are demonstrated, something after this order: There is as much nutriment in a small plate of butter as there is half a head of cabbage or three-quarters of an orange. House planning is one of the first subjects taken up. What kind of a home would you like to have? Draw a plan. Then the matter of living on a stated cost. How to serve three meals a day for the conventional family of five for $1.50, and a seven-course dinner for 50 cents a plate, and from that more elaborate course the scale goes even to the college girl who has to live on 30 cents a day.

This work is not done theoretically, but in the most practical manner. The grocerymen of Tallahassee are well acquainted with the girls of the economics department, for they are required to buy their own raw materials as well as plan and serve. Table service, too, is a part of the course, and a part of the exhibition was a dinner served to a large number of the friends and relatives of the students. The cost of the food materials is all the extra cost to the students in this department. "What we would like to impress on the girls and their parents," said Miss Agnes Harris, director of the economical department, "is that they can take this work along with their academic work and come out with a higher degree and a far better knowledge of how to deal with the problems that will confront them in their own homes."

THOSE IN CHARGE.

Miss Agnes Harris is in charge of the canning club work, associated on like standing with J. J. Vernon, dean of the College of Agriculture of the University at Gainesville, who has direction of the work of the corn clubs. They now have work going on in thirteen counties under the immediate directorship of local instructors who have received their training at the university and the college respectively. In some instances these local instructors are paid by the county commissioners; in others by farmers' institutes or women's clubs. In every instance the work is going forward with satisfactory results. The canning outfit used costs only $5, and it takes but a short time to teach any girl how to use one. Miss Harris has just returned from a trip over her territory. It is the custom to give a demonstration to which the public is invited, for Miss Harris says it is not the purpose to teach girls only, but any one who wishes to learn.

It is extension work in its best sense. The local clubs keep in touch with the director and receive such instruction by mail as may be required from time to time. The usual appropriation made by the county is $100 and the extension fund supplies the balance. This has proved sufficient for a beginning, but it is believed that as the movement grows that the requirements will be greater in proportion to the good accomplished.

Miss Stella has direction of the college work under Miss Harris, for the latter is absent a goodly part of the time engaged in the business of visitation and working for the further development of the movement. It is a step leading to the establishment of such work in all the schools of the state.

The beautiful display of needle work done by the students called forth expressions of wonder from all. The work of the department spoke for itself on this occasion. The students were attractively costumed in kitchen dress with caps of white to match their aprons, and explained their work as well as demonstrated it for the benefit of the hundreds of visitors who called during the day.

Kaiser's Playing Cards

(Special Cable to The Journal.)

BERLIN.—The kaiser, who is fond of a game of cards now and then, has come to the conclusion that ordinary playing cards are scarcely good enough for so illustrious a personage as himself. He has accordingly had specials packs designed for his own use. The four kings are represented by King George V., the Tsar, the Emperor Francis Joseph and the King of Italy; while the queens are, of course, the respective consorts of these monarchs and the knaves are the ambassadors of the four countries at the Prussian court. It was impossible for France to be represented among the "picture cards," as she is a republic; but the kaiser has replaced the traditional aces by portraits of four of the most beautiful leaders of Parisian society, so that even the most ardent Chauvinist will not bet able to fabricate an intentional "incident" out of the imperial pack of cards.

SENATOR TILLMAN TELLS HOW HE HELD ANGEL OF DEATH AT BAY

WASHINGTON, June 7.—If anybody doubts that a sixty-three-year-old paralytic can indefinitely hold death at bay; if anybody doubts that by a strenuous system of physical culture the lame and the halt can learn to pick up their burdens and walk, just let that person read the remarkable statements of Senator Benjamin R. Tillman, of South Carolina, on his own restoration to health.

Three years ago this picturesque southerner was stricken and for weeks lay helpless while the shadows of the Great Beyond hovered over him. His friends and family lost hope. His colleagues expected daily for months to be summoned to his funeral. The newspapers prepared their obituary sketches, making ready for what seemed the inevitable. This was back in 1910.

But the old warrior refused to yield. The same grim determination that marked his long political career led him to make another fight. And he won again as he had won so many times when the odds against him were not so overwhelming. He won too, by a system of exercise that is astonishingly simple, yet almost miraculously effective. Moreover he has gained thirty pounds—not ordinary fat, mind you, but thirty pounds of good hard muscle.

He is back in Washington doing business at the old stand. He is chairman of a powerful senate committee. He can walk ten miles any day and do as much hard work as any of his associates. All this is possible through a combination of will power and wisely planned exercises that forced his useless muscles into activity, giving life to worn out tissues.

HOW HE GOT WELL.

"I didn't mean to let paralysis kill me," says the senator. "I proposed to get well and stay here a few years longer. I did both by a simple plan of physical culture and here is my system:

"1. Before getting up in the morning, take the head off the pillow and stretch out straight. Begin by kicking with first one foot and then the other fifteen times each. During this and other movements where counting is required I draw in the breath to the limit and hold it while the movement is on, from ten to fifteen times.

"2. Put the heels upon the bed with the knees drawn up then throw the knees apart as far as they can be carried repeating twenty times.

"3. Throw first one foot and then the other towards the headboard, keeping the knee joints as straight as you can.

"4. While still lying on the back kick out with both feet as wide apart as you can and do the kicking with emphasis so as to strain the muscles of the calf and soles of the feet. Elevate both feet at once toward the headboard and then the spine as much as possible by using the abdominal muscles to pull up the lower extremities three times. If the hands are placed under the small part of the back and the arms are used as a lever to help elevate the legs and feet it is very much more effectiv. If in an iron bed this can be facilitated by grasping the railing above the head with the hands and pulling up the legs and feet by the use of the muscles of the back and belly. This is very fine for reducing the paunch as it substitutes muscle for fat and hardens the abdomen.

"5. Fasten the feet under something and pull the trunk up to a sitting posture, drop back and repeat four or five times. This is very straining at first, and one ought to go about it cautiously until the muscles have become accustomed to the strain.

"7. Throw the head back with the feet on the bed, and lift the body clear so that the shoulders do not touch. This will form an arch. Repeat two or three times. This is enough in bed in the morning.

TAKE A COLD BATH.

"8. Take a cold bath and rub down briskly unless you do not like cold water or have not the facilities to do it. Put on underwear and take a light pair of dumb bells, (3 1-2 pounds) to give momentum to the movements. Begin to exercise the other muscles which have not yet been used.

"9. While standing flat-footed, throw the arms down by the thighs backward. Straighten up and repeat ten times. Continue in the same motion, bend the trunk forward as nearly horizontal as you can maintain it and let the arms swing as near the floor as they can go. This limbers up the muscles of the back.

"10. Now keeping the knees stiff, try to punch the big toe of each foot with both fists. Repeat five or six times.

"11. Using the dumb bells, pass them to the right and left one arm going by the belly while the other is extended as high above the head as possible and as one goes down elevate the other. This will lubricate and loosen the joints of the shoulders.

"12. Throw both arms behind the back so as to bring both hands as near together as possible, with the dumb bells clinched hard. Try this ten times.

"13. Still holding the dumb bells, throw one to the rear and the other to the front and twist the spine by first looking over one shoulder and the other. This is to loosen the spinal column and make the vertebrae twist each on the other.

"14. Swing the dumb bells backward, forward and downward until a circle is performed by returning them to the starting point. I do this five times backward, and then five times forward with each arm alternately. This lubricates the muscles of the shoulder and arms, producing circulation of the blood.

"15. Any time you feel the need of it and think of it straighten up elevating the hands above the head then bend forward and try to touch the floor with the tips of the fingers, the knees being held stiff. By repeating this straightening up and bending I can usually go to the floor the third or fourth time. At first I could hardly go lower than my knees and then the muscles of my back felt as though I would wrench them apart.

"16. Catch hold of the bed or a chair and squat as low as you can and then straighten up six or eight times. If you have hold of the bed or chair you can bend backward as far as possible each time that you squat and straighten up, it will assist you in loosening the vertebrae and bending the spine backward throughout its length. This is an excellent thing to do as it relieves the nerves from the pressure of the vertebrae. It is the use of this exercise which enables me to mount my horse although I am so weak otherwise."

EFFECT OF EXERCISE.

After detailing these exercises the senator went a little further and discussed their effect. He said:

"I practice these motions morning and night before dressing and after undressing. It takes about ten minutes not including the bath. I feel a very marked difference in my strength as well as otherwise.

"I have found that deep breathing adds very much to my strength. It has facilitated my return to health as far as I have climbed back. First by compression of the diaphram, drive all the breath out of the body that you can. This is what the doctors call dead or residual air, and it remains in the lungs unless they are compressed. After you have exhaled all you can, then hold the lips together and inhale to the limit. This is the best thing I have ever discovered for insomnia, as almost before you know it, while you are counting the inhalations you are asleep. I never remember having done this more than ten times without going to sleep.

"Another aid to my restoration to health has been hot water. I drink all the water I can and as hot as I can bear it; and when I think I have taken enough, I drink some more and still more. The average stomach has been accustomed to cold water and will reject the hot at first unless it is very hot. After drinking it persistently it becomes very acceptable to the stomach and no nausea results.

"I owe my restoration to the health I now have to four things: careful diet, drinking hot water, deep breathing and physical culture exercises I have outlined."

HOW TIME CHANGES OUR POINT OF VIEW

By Mrs. W. H. Felton

How well do I remember the things I delighted in when my life was young and my heart unworn and tender! I enjoyed things with all the vitality that I possessed, and I grieved the same way, and those childish griefs were dreadful experiences albeit they seem so trivial nowadays. Time with ever rolling tide has carried both joys and griefs out of sight until the griefs seem farcical because I had such a happy sheltered existence and my earlier joys seem to be puny affairs, although they occupied so many waking hours in heyday of my youth.

I am still the same being that I was three-quarters of a century ago and it is only my point of view that has been changed in later years.

And yet I have never put away childish things as called for the loving care of my parents seems to be as fresh in memory as when I was nursed into baby sleep by their willing arms, and the pride I felt when I went "up head" in my spelling class was as satisfying as any triumph in writing that I have ever enjoyed in my activity with my pen life.

The things that endure and remain, that comfort and cheer, center about the true things, the honest thoughts and the earnest resolves of both early and later life.

Perhaps this little scrap of poetry will explain it better:

When I think sometimes of old griefs I had,
Of sorrows that once seemed too harsh to bear,
And youth's resolve to never more be glad,
I laugh—and do not care.

When I think sometimes of the joy I knew,
The gay, glad laughter ere my heart was wise,
The trvial happiness that seemed so true,
The tears are in my eyes.

Time—Time the cynic—how he mocks us all!
And yet today I can but think him right.
Ah heart, the old joy is so tragical
And the old grief so light.

SIGHTSEEING IN NEW YORK CITY.

Many of the readers of The Journal have been made acquainted with the unveiling of the Maine monument which came off in this city on Friday, the 30th. The crowd was so immense in the city that I did not attempt to go to the unveiling because I should have been unable to hear a single word, and more than all, run the risk of being pushed around in this immense jam of people. But I did go yesterday to see the monument, and quite nea enough to see the effect, with the base still covered with many of the flowers that were placed thereon by the enthusiastic people. It is a very imposing piece of marble creation, with a number of mammoth figures, and has an ideal location in the lovely park. No location could be more admirable for that purpose, and it will be as much visited as Grant's monument on Riverside Drive. By the courtesy of a friend and accompanied by a lovely young lady from Pasadena, Cal., I had the extraordinary opportunity for driving all through Central park in a limousine, away up into the Bronx settlements, and in returning came down the Riverside Drive for miles upon miles along the Hudson river. All along the river is a steady continuation of elegant hotels and apartment houses. I never before understood the mammoth wealth of the rich residents of the greatest city in the United States.

To my provincial eyes it was a display of palaces, each one vying with the other in magnitude and splendor. Fifth avenue was not finer to my eyes, than this apparently limitless stretch of stone and marble along the Hudson river. I was told that these grand apartment houses are most expensive places to live in, but certainly they are fine enough to gratify the vanity of the most ambitious.

We stopped on the ride for a sight of the convict ship that has a terrible history, and which ship was raised from the depths of the harbor of Sydney, Australia, by British people and brought over to this country anchored in the Hudson river by some enterprising people who made money by telling the story of the "Success" and its painful horrors to American sightseers. It added to the things to be seen a spot of gloom in this display of magnificent landscapes and palatial lodging houses for the multi-rich. Variety is the spice of life.

Saturday afternoon was the finest day I have yet experienced in New York City. The rain that ushered me in and which prevailed unceasingly during Wednesday night left a harsh wind that sent chills over your system and kept on for nearly two days. But Saturday was as fine a day as ever came to Georgia, and the whole population of New York City that could ride or drive or walk was apparently out of doors. I saw thousands upon thousands of children at play in Central Park, and I am sure I also saw thousands of the most elegant vehicles in the world filled with well dressed people. It was a moving picture, and endless panorama, that needed no films to explain to your mind. I rode on street cars from Thirty-fourth street to the Battery and back again, and then from Thirty-fourth street as before mentioned to the upper end of Manhattan island and back again. It was a rare experience for anybody who had youth and vigor, but still more rare for an old lady who had passed three-quarters of a century before seeing it. I have not bothered my mind about looking up stores and pricing things in the stores. It takes so much time and fatigues your feet, so I let the fine clothes in the immense windows alone, unless I saw a crowd gathered in the street, and then I glimpsed the sensation also.

In one of the handsomest windows there was a lay figure of an exquisitely dressed young woman in street costume, everything perfect from top to toe, and I saw a crowd packed around. I waited my time and then I saw what entertained them so much.

On the young lady's ankle was what resembled a bracelet, set with brilliants (maybe diamonds), and her foot was extended so we could see the whole display of foot and ankle.

I wondered how she was to get along if in a hurry with that encumbrance, for the snake's head stuck out, and I feel sure it would stick in if the wearer's feet should happen to hit together when she ran to catch a car, as all New Yorkers seem to be running all day long. If she could dance with the anklet it might have decorated her dance costume, but in the street! Ah, vanites of of vanity!

I thought we paid high prices for food at home, but, my! it would bankrupt the most of us if we ate a big New York cafe. A dollar dinner is considered very reasonable, and if you want some of their single dishes it will cost you all of a dollar when you pay your check at the counter. I have been kept busy in looking around where I could get a fair meal for as little as a half-dollar.

It is well that the multi-rich like to live in New York City. A poor Georgia cracker couldn't stay a week and carry any money back home with him, the food prices are so steep where I have examined the bills of fare.

one in Atlanta ever since the war is that of R. H. D. Marshall, sole manufacturer, owner, and distributor of Marshall's improved London cement. His regular hang-out is on the viaduct.

For the last forty years Marshall has plied his trade in Atlanta and Nashville. He is a Confederate veteran, a member of Company F, forty-first Tennessee. His left hand is gone, shot away by a Yankee bullet at Vicksburg.

When he throws back his head and shows you his blue eyes and his short gray beard, he looks like the pictures of his hero, General Lee.

As Marshall is a Confederate veteran, he does not have to have a city license for peddling, but only one from the state. Perhaps he should not be included in a story about begging peddlers, for the worth of his wares is known through many years of sale.

Marshall is a friend of the old man with the flute. It is a familiar sight to see them of a Saturday afternoon, as they cross the viaduct, the old blind man wavering unsteadily on his feet, and Marshall, bent and shuffling, as he guides his comrade through the maze of vehicles to the further bank of the city's stream of traffic.

FLORIDA GEORGE.

Another familiar figure around Atlanta is George, the negro who was hurt in a railroad accident and now has taken up the shoe-string trade.

George is stylish. He goes to Florida every year. When the trees first shed their leaves in October and the brisk fall breezes cut under the bones of an old darky, Atlanta business men begin to expect George. In he comes some cold autumn day.

"Boss," he says, "I's 'bout ready to go to Saint Augustine."

In a few weeks George is gone, not to come back until the open season for watermelons.

They know him as well in St. Augustine, and there the spring months find George calling on his patrons to tell them that he wants to go to Atlanta just as he visits his Atlanta friends in the autumn to tell them about the Florida trip.

Soon George, the old man with the flute, the Cashions, the others, will be gone. Perhaps Atlanta will be better for their going, perhaps the hearts of her citizens will harden when they have no lame and halt and blind to remind them of the under dogs.

Some say that alms-giving is hurting the beggar more than his poverty. "It is not money but work they should have," is the plea of the associated charities. "There never was a self-respecting beggar."

So it is that in their own way the people of the associated charities are trying to help these pitiful ones while others are trying another way.

There have been many instances where the way of the associated charities has proved to be the successful way. One of them was the case of the natureopathic doctor.

They found him on Peachtree street, drunk, blind and begging. The man told Joe Logan that he wanted to be a natureopathic doctor.

Natureopathic doctors were a new breed to Mr. Logan, but he told the man that the associated charities would furnish a hundred dollars if the man would furnish a hundred, that he could buy his outfit here, and it would be shipped to another town.

The new doctor scraped up the hundred and bought the outfit, making a very intelligent selection of his instruments.

Several months later Mr. Logan met a friend who hailed from the town where the natureopathic doctor had established his business.

"Seen anything of an old blind doctor down that way?" said Mr. Logan.

"You bet," said his friend. "Why your own brother-in-law is paying twenty dollars a week to that fellow for his nature cure."

PURITAN PARIS

(Special Cable to The Journal.)

PARIS.—Is Paris becoming Puritan?

In the opinion of Mlle. Adoree Villany, there is no doubt that it is.

This charming young lady has just been before the Paris courts on a charge of outraging the public modesty.

As a dancer she may fairly be said to have outstripped all her rivals. To speak plainly, Mlle. Adoree appeared on the stage naked—not "almost" or "practically," or "as good as naked," but naked tout court.

To be sure it was—or mademoiselle claimed it was—at a strictly private performance, to which only her good friends, the artists and litterateurs of Paris had been invited.

Unfortunately a detective discovered that five francs planked down at the box office were as effective a passport as if he had called himself Rodin or Anatole France.

Hence, argued the prosecuting counsel, it was impossible to assert that the performance was private.

Mlle. Adoree then fell back on her second line of defense.

She was an artist, she said, and when "she stripped off her garments it was her soul laid bare."

"But not only your soul, Mademoiselle," slyly insinuated the advocate, and there was laughter in court.

Several letters were read in which the purely artistic nature of the performance was stressed.

A German professor on leaving the theater had been "filled with gratitude to the Creator for his wonderful works."

An elderly painter regretted that "the lady was so thin"—not a solely artistic appreciation this, as counsel for the prosecution took care to point out.

That gentleman, who had been thoroughly enjoying himself, thus summed up the case for the prosecution:

COMMERCIALIZING CONVULSIONS

BY BISHOP W. A. CANDLER

ONE of the most diabolical manifestations of human depravity which has come to public view in our times, or in any times, is the effort of certain persons to commercialize international antagonisms for the purpose of making money on military and naval supplies.

Recently during the debate in the German reichstag over the proposal to increase the German army to a peace footing of 900,000 men, one of the members from Berlin boldly charged the Krupps with promoting international irritations and raising war scares by an elaborate system of bribery and advertising. He declared that both French and German newspapers and subordinate officials in the war offices, were in the pay of the manufacturers of ordnance and armor plate to bring about public excitement with reference to possible conflicts between the two great powers of France and Germany. It was specifically stated that a man named Brandt, one of the paid agents of the Krupps, made it his business to get upon intimate terms with officials of both the war and navy departments, and used money to secure from them details from secret documents, regarding construction, results of experiments, and prices on war materials quoted by other firms. Military and naval secrets, thus betrayed for money, were skilfully published in certain subsidized jingo newspapers at moments best suited to influence warlike sentiments among the people, and move both governments to buy liberally military and naval supplies. It was alleged that the late Baron Stumm, who made his great fortune out of the ordnance works at Dillingen, had been in the habit of bribing officials who approved the custom of the managers of the gun factory in subsidizing jingo sheets to advocate war scares and diverting advertising patronage to the columns of these incendiary newspapers.

While much which was said by this member of the reichstag from Berlin, may be over-statement, which judicious minds will discount considerably, the Prussian minister of war has admitted the substantial correctness of most of the charges made.

Upon the case the LONDON CHRONICLE, one of the organs of the Liberal party in England, thus comments: "The heroic aspect of German military endeavour, as appeared in 1813, the era for a great national display of self-sacrifice, are sadly tarnished by the revelation of the great German gun and armor manufacturers spending money on patriotism just as other manufacturers spend it on advertisement and for the same ends."

The CHRONICLE makes much of the story of the pains taken by a German gun manufacturer to have printed in a Parisian newspaper an article asserting that France was doubling her supply of machine guns—the object of the article being not that the statement would be believed by the public, but would be accepted for its face value in Germany, and lead the German war office to make a large purchase of the gun maker's wares. It was alleged that the late Baron Krupp had sold armor plate to the Russian Steel Trust in 1909 on the terms they were paid by Germany for similar plate.

So we understand that the Krupps are dealing with our government also, which may explain the recent theft of certain secret papers from the government offices in Washington. It may explain also much of the war-talk which is finding its way to the public ear through certain newspapers in both Japan and our own country.

The PHILADELPHIA RECORD said recently in an editorial: "It is not unlikely that there is a connection between war talk and dividends. It has been proved in Germany, and we have manufacturers of war material who may be capable of stirring up public feeling with a view to make their business more active. Of course they would not precipitate war; they would not cause men to be killed; but it is quite possible that they would like to have enough war feeling aroused to lead the government to place large purchases of military and naval supplies. There is no excuse whatever for any war talk. Japan has no just or even plausible grievance against this country, but she will wait till she has several more before she resorts to force. She beat Russia, but she is still in debt to her victory. What California land law is not in its nature a cause of war, though of course it is a cause of friction."

Can anything be more despicable than an effort to make money by creating a distrust and friction among nations? It may be that these gun makers and steel-plate manufacturers do not desire that actual war shall be brought to pass; but they take the risk of bringing on the conflict by playing upon the sensibilities of nations already suspicious of each other. The Japanese statesmen, for example, would not willingly declare war against the United States; but newspaper publications in Japan might arouse that excitable people, just emerging from the ignorance and isolation of centuries, to demand of their leaders war.

Issuing such publications in France and Germany is like striking lucifer matches in a powder house; no explosion may occur from such reckless acts, but the chances are all the other way. Wars have been caused by acts less definitely directed to the purpose of firing national antipathy.

And what does war involve? The death of thousands of men, the orphanage of children and the widowhood of mothers, the rise of international hatreds and the arrest of the march of civilization for long periods. For men to bring about these diabolical purposes of international incendiarism?

There are politicians also who participate in this diabolism. These are, who play upon the passions and prejudices of the populace in order to win office. Some of the California politicians say Governor Hiram Johnson and the California legislature have been "playing politics" of this sort in the land law which has so irritated the Japanese. Whatever may be required in the future, there seems to be no urgent need for that piece of legislation just now, except to secure the votes of certain anti-Asiatic organizations in San Francisco and a few other places.

We may look for anti-Japanese agitators to appear in the region of the republic east of the Rocky Mountains, and some will be heard screaming alarming war cries right here in the south. It behooves our people to pay no attention to such alarmists. It their relation to the steel manufacturers of the country were thoroughly exposed to view, their motive for demanding more battle ships would be apparent, nefarious.

With these incendiary forces infesting the great nations of the world, it will become sensible and patriotic people to cultivate a spirit of calmness and self-control when bellicose utterances are published in certain newspapers. We should not fall into spasms of excitement at the bidding of men who are engaged in the business of commercializing commotions.

And we should be especially calm, when publications of an inflammatory character are made concerning affairs in Mexico. No friend nor loyal son of our own country will contribute a word to embroil our republic with the republic south of us. Intervention should not be thought of. Our government should seek by all means to promote peace in the earth, especially in North and South America.

BISHOP WARREN A. CANDLER.

THE BEST DRESSED PARIS GIRL

GO AS YOU PLEASE---RUNNING REMARKS

By Smith Clayton

SEEMS to me Paris was specially built for a Bohemian penny-a-liner to knock about in and pin gossipy stuff to his cuffs. And I don't care what side of that gay old town you strike, whether the haunts of Victor Hugo, Alexandre Dumas, Balzac, Chateaubriand, Zola or any other of the old literary fellows who struggled, starved, wrote and died to make a name and a fame, it's all just the same.

GOOD GOSSIP.

Then, too, you find plenty of good gossipy stuff about the crazy people of the stage—that's what the world calls 'em, and they are quite different from the work-a-day folks who are in no danger of catching the artistic temperament; and about the martial glory old boys like Napoleon and McMahon and Turenne and old Richelieu, for he was a fighter, too, you remember at Rochelle —and that queer fellow Boulanger, who tried a decade or so ago to play Napoleon, but went up like a rainbow-painted balloon and came down like a ton of 30-cent pieces.

QUITE QUEER.

Quaint old Boulanger, but, oh, what a joke he was compared to even Marshal Mahon, or the Duke of Orleans or Henry of Navarre—much less Napoleon, the buttons of whose gloves he was unworthy to unbutton. But didn't I forget something there? Berthier, I think, tells us that Napoleon scorned to wear gloves, declaring that they are an unnecessary luxury. There's another. How about neckties?

And that reminds, before taking a cup of black coffee and a bit of rosbif at Durand's, for there's a Durand's in Paris as well as in Atlanta, but no better the disparity in the magnitude of the two cities considered—before eating a bit, as the English say, using bit because it suggests a bridle purpose.

A STORY OF CLOTHES.

I want to tell about the best dressed woman I saw at Paris. It was at 2:30 in the morning—don't be alarmed—at the Olympic Music hall, at that time one of the most popular and picturesque all-night places in the gay capital. This woman was a cocotte, one of those queens of the night at Paris, or stars, you may say, that blink in the cotton crown until that sable sorceress night dies in the saffron throes of breaking day.

JUST RIGHT.

She weighed about 135 pounds and was a brunet of pronounced type, her wealth of jettiness naturally curling over a head fit for a goddess. Her complexion was wondrously fair, her eyes of deep violet, almond-shaped, and shot with dreamy light which illumined a face of Grecian cast, the classic slender nose and mouth of thin rose lips and cheeks in which pink and white battled for the mastery, and neck that in its soft white symmetry would have put to the blush that of the queen of all the swans, and a full-throated she singing, died, and dying sang! But don't fancy that this face was perfect with all its fascinating features. No face can claim perfection, but what the French call the tout en ensemble was all there. Old Alexander Pope wrote the philosophy of true beauty in two lines:

"'Tis not the eye, or lip, we beauty call,
But the joint force and full effect of all."

SHE WAS, TOO.

I said best dressed.

Why?

Because most artistically attired.

Why, again?

HARMONY'S THE THING.

Because her dress harmonized perfectly with her style of beauty. It was of pure white material, satin, I think, full sleeved, and falling about her form caressingly in graceful snowy folds. The pattern was strikingly simple. The fit was perfect. There was no painful tightening up at the waist, but the effect was that of white undulated from swan-like neck to snowy slipper, the wave at the waist, of course, being slightly more curving than elsewhere. There were no embossed abrasions to mar the effect. There was no studied grotesque embroidery to offend the eye. There were no glittering gew-gaws gemming the ears and breast and hands.

But she looked like a queen in a book that night," without, however, "the wreath of pearl in her raven hair." Her sole ornament was a necklace of pure white pearls.

A PICTURE.

As this woman stood there all unconscious of the almost perfection of her artistic attire, I thought, here is not a woman, but a picture in grace, simplicity, harmony, which appeals to the correct and most delicate taste of the world.

And from such costumes seen upon the demi-mondaines of Paris fashion gets its best hints all over the world.

ONCE MORE WHY?

Why?

Because the rule for a good picture is that the grand central idea must be surrounded by ideas of relativity and the proper disposition of light and shade must correspond to the main idea.

Why again?

Because all experience shows that this combination always produces the most pleasing effect.

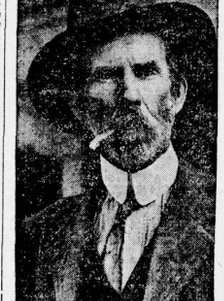
THEY ARE ALL FRIGHT.

A little later that same night I saw an English woman pass by. She was a heavy blonde in crimson silk, but she blinked at the Rue de la Paix with her hands bedlamonded looking like fireflies on a tangled raid, and there was enough diamond display about her head, neck and breast to irradiate a small landscape. She wore several thousand pounds, but presented a nightmare in apparel just the same.

Some people just naturally haven't got any idea of good taste—then there are others.

THEY KNOW HOW.

As I have said before, the French are born artistic. It is a sort of gift to the nation. It knows no distinction of class. What French women, en masse, lack in natural beauty they make up in the dainty art of adornment. They know how. If you meet a fat French girl at a fete she's charming, because of her charm of manner, and the fact that her dress just suits a fat girl. You couldn't imagine any dress in which she would look so well.



SMITH CLAYTON.

NOT TOO THIN.

If you meet a thin girl at a ball you may be sure that she don't strike you as being thin because her attire is so adjusted to her attenuation and you catch the idea at once that if she was plump, thin, slinky and clinging, she wouldn't look half as well in this dress.

IT'S THE WAY THEY'RE MADE.

And let me tell you, there never was a truer saying than "Fine feathers don't make fine birds!" The fineness of the fabric cuts very little figure with the women of Paris.

If generally worn in other places it simply accentuates the bad taste of the wearer. If homely, awkward, silks, diamonds make but a more striking, and clumsiness more pronounced, for they do attract the eye even while they offend the taste.

WATCH THE WAGER.

But I will wager a speckled hen against a member of the legislature that a grisette from the Lower section who works for $5 a week can take common osnaburg and get up a dress from the pattern for a pair of wheels that will fit her perfectly, and will be upholstered in such taste that she'll look better in it than a Boston belle in $500 worth of Parisian dress who knows nothing of the charm of curve and the grace of outline. And, a strong point, who don't know how to dress her hair so that it will perfectly suit, as it were, to the cut or color of her clothes.

FROM FLUSHER.

It is precisely this charm of the artistic that sets men wild when they see the women of Paris.

LIGHT.

It is the eternal fitnes of things that catches and holds the attention—and if the clothes of the average Parisian who passes with the wits and the golden d'ors of the men in the night haunts—of the women who have no use for garish display except to keep these charmers of the ve sma' hours are not attuned to the infinite they are dangerously near it because it is the heighth of art to conceal art and the best art is nothing at all but the best expression of the beautiful in nature in all her varied attire.

IF—NATURE—

If nature is not the infinite what is it? Nobody has ever found an end to it or a beginning either for that matter.

JUST IT.

That's just where the clothes of the cocotte comes in—there is no end to the charm of them and no matter how unpretty the girl may have been originally made, somehow the girl gets mixed up in the fancy with the clothes and then you have a pair of charms without end!

THE OLD BOYS.

I did want to say something about the old writers and military boys and change clothes, but will all have to go over. But what's the difference? You'll get these thumb-nail sketches in my book some day.

"Bonnes-nuits in Paris" will be the title and there will be in addition just as much spice as the law and the mails will allow.

QUITE AWHILE.

Now, let's get another cup of that black coffee at Durand's and another bit of rosbif.

This restaurant is or used to be just opposite the Church of the Magdalen, Boulevard Madeleine, in the very heart of Paris. It is one of the best in prices and a most famous establishment.

THAT FOUR-FLUSHER.

It is great specialty is the rosbif, and Englishmen and Americans who flock there are death on roast beef. Over this restaurant there used to be a big hall. It was there that Boulanger in 1888 tried to pull off a coup l'etat. At least, his conspiracy was hatched in that hall. This room-on-the-stairs, for it hardly deserved the name of hall, was overdrawn the republic—but all that's another story.

At any rate France is the lion that always came back, and like Robespierre and the rest Boulanger would have interviewed the guillotine.

A RED TOPIC.

By the way, I'm going to write on the story of the guillotine next week. It has been a very warm number in the history of Paris—but no hotter than the coffee of Durand's—"another bit of Texas steer, if you please!" This reminds me of Atlanta, where everything seems to be fast except the Paris Tourist club.

Why don't you get busy, schools of the south, and you churches get a move on you!

LOOK HERE!

Look here, scholars, you can chip in and send your favorite teacher, and congregations can send ministers.

An outing of two weeks in the center of culture and art and education in the OLD WORLD is the thing for tired teachers and preachers.

What! $320 for trip, ticket and two weeks' stay. Why, 10,000 public school children of Atlanta could throw in 10 cents apiece and send three teachers.

QUITE AWHILE.

Then there's the biggest ship that ever cut a wave, the Imperator, to go on.

If you let this chance get away it's all off. Safe? Why, sure! There are no icebergs in July—and if there were—but what's that to us?

Some people now swear that a feather will sink. I'm the greatest water-coward on earth—and if I can cross the pond anybody in the world ought to be able to do it.

ONE MORE.

Another thing—if you are doomed to die on the water, you die that way and all the land lubbering on earth

Ever hear of the old sailor who had weathered a hundred gales, and got knocked down and killed by a chimney blown over in a seaport town?

Fact! He was born to die on land

Influence of Feed on Quality of Milk

BY DR. ANDREW M. SOULE

A SHORT time ago an article appeared in a New York paper with reference to the unwholesomeness of the food products consumed by many persons in the United States. Among other things specific attention was directed to the fact that large numbers of cows were fed on cotton seed meal, the inference being drawn that the milk obtained from animals so fed was not wholesome. The article was sensational in connection and alarmistic and no doubt many people reading it were misled by its statements. The chances are that the author knows nothing about cotton seed or its by-products, and does not realize their essential relation to the dairy industry, not only of the United States but of Europe as well. If he had been informed even in the slightest degree relative to this matter he would hardly have made a statement so much at variance with the facts.

It may be said without fear of successful contradiction that the dairy industry of the south is based on the use of cotton seed meal as the chief concentrate fed to dairy cows, and nowhere else in the United States are farmers able to obtain so cheap and desirable a source of protein for the nutrition of dairy cattle. The one regret that must be expressed in this connection is the fact that our dairy enterprises are inadequately developed in proportion to public demand. This is not due to any lack of an abundant supply of cotton seed meal but to a failure to develop one of the most desirable and profitable industries in which southern farmers can engage at the present time.

The value of cotton seed meal as a concentrate in the nutrition of dairy cows is more clearly illustrated when attention is called to the composition of milk. The average of several hundred analyses indicates that it contains about 87.17 per cent of water, 4.69 per cent of fat, 3.02 per cent of casein, .53 per cent of albumen, 4.88 per cent of sugar and .71 per cent of ash. The casein and albumen make up nearly 4 per cent of the milk and constitute its protein compounds. The cow, of course, has no ability to manufacture milk unless the elements out of which it is composed are supplied to her in the feed in somewhat the proportion nature demands. Milk being rich in protein elements, it therefore becomes essential that the dairy cow be fed a ration rich in this material. Cotton seed meal owing to its very high percentage of protein becomes therefore one of the most desirable concentrates to feed to dairy cows. Naturally it may be fed singly or in combination with other foodstuffs.

No doubt there are some who imagine that cotton seed meal is injurious to cows, but after having seen it fed to several hundred dairy animals through a period of eighteen years, the writer can testify that it is a thoroughly wholesome and desirable feed when fed under rational conditions. Not long since over a hundred cows in a dairy in the peppers to have been worth many thousands of dollars was made in a southern state. The cows were fed cotton seed because it was said to be moldy and unwholesome, and therefore not fit to feed to horses, cows and other farm stock kept on the farm. People are inclined to lose sight of facts of this kind and to condemn one class of food to the advantage of the other. Cotton seed meal must naturally be made from well manured and protected seed. Where this is done the meal obtained therefrom is thoroughly wholesome and desirable as a food for dairy cows. It would be folly to suppose that it might produce indigestion and various other troubles; so would corn for that matter. All concentrates must be fed with some reasonable degree of skill and common sense. The ills which live stock may suffer from any class of food are generally due to the ignorance of the persons feeding the same rather than to the foodstuff itself, provided of course it has been properly made and preserved.

Cotton seed meal is being fed at the present time to dairy cattle in practically every county in the cotton belt. It is being fed to herds of cows where the choicest quality of milk is made and shipped to supply customers in the larger towns and cities. It has been used in dozens of tests at the various experiment stations in the United States and abroad and in every case has proven to be not only wholesome and desirable, but one of the cheapest sources of protein available for dairy rations. There are few concentrates which blend more satisfactorily with such foodstuffs as corn, cow peas and silage as cotton seed meal. Corn, as is well known, is low in protein and high in carbohydrates, and when combined with cotton seed meal it furnishes an ideal ration for the dairy cow. If cotton seed meal be fed with forms or roughness realtively low in protein the results obtained will be improved as many demonstrations have shown. It is an ideal food to use in combination with corn silage and may be fed to cattle on grass with very excellent results. If used in reasonable amounts it may be fed for indefinite periods of time and the animals keep in a thoroughly vigorous and healthy condition. The great trouble with the average feeder is his lack of acquaintance with the concentrated nature of this material, and his disposition to feed it therefore as freely as he would corn or some other foodstuff not so rich in digestible nutrients. If the farmer and dairyman will bear in mind that one pound of cotton seed meal contains about four times as much digestible protein as a pound of corn, he will have no difficulty in feeding this material. In other words, 4 to 5 pounds of cotton seed meal containing the protein equivalent of from 16 to 20 pounds of corn meal. It is seldom that this much corn meal would be fed as a dairy ration to animal weighing 1,000 pounds, and the average feeder who is unacquainted with cotton seed meal can hardly bring himself to realize that 4 or 5 pounds is about the right amount to feed per day to a 1,000 pound cow when not giving over two gallons of milk.

The fact that the statement referred to in the early part of this article is baseless is known to the record of our experts of cotton seed meal which in 1911 unfortunately amounted to about 850,000 tons. This meal did not bring the producers in that year more than about $15 a ton, yet it is known to contain fertilizing constituents of an equal value. This meal went chiefly to Denmark, Germany and Great Britain and was used largely in the nutrition of dairy cows, though of course considerable quantities went to cattle feeders as well. For years the policy of these nations has been to secure concentrated foods materials of high nutritive *quality and rich in plant food constit*uents from all the outlying sections of the world and feed on their farms. As a result, they have dairy herds which were extremely poor a half century ago, but are now rated as among the most productive and desirable for agricultural purposes in the world. Denmark has risen to pre-eminence as a dairy nation and the products of her herds top the market in Great Britain and Europe. It may be surprising to some to know that the basis of the dairy ration fed to Denmark cows is the great majority of cases on the cotton seed meal produced in the southern part of the United States. This meal can be taken across 3,000 miles of water and fed with such remarkable success by the farmers of Europe, it is surprising that it would not be valuable and desirable for use here at home. As a matter *of fact, as long as the meal is allow*ed to be shipped to Europe and used in the aggregate to millions of dollars is being made on the soils of the south to the enrichment of the natives of Europe. At the same time they are developing an industry of world-wide importance and producing for their consuming population the most wholesome and desirable of beef and dairy products.

It is absurd and ridiculous that any one who takes the time to familiarize himself with the basic importance of the by-products of cotton seed meal to the animal industries of the United States should write an article which tends to discredit the use of these materials. What is needed is a campaign of education which will reveal to our own people the very great mistake they are making in failing to utilize these products here at home so that our cattle beef and dairy industries may be advanced to the proud position which they should occupy. When this is done "starving America" will be abundantly supplied with the most wholesome and desirable dairy products at a reasonable cost.

CROPS FOR SUMMER GRAZING.

E. B. S., Ben Hill, Ga., writes: What do you think best to sow for a summer pasture? Have 10 acres. Have thought of sowing oats and peas together. How about Germea millet as a forage for cows, also sorghum hay? What would you sow when seeding Bermuda that would be good to pasture while the Bermuda is getting started? I am starting in the dairy business and would like your answers to these questions.

The best summer pasture which one can have for dairy cows in Georgia is a good Bermuda sod. Where this is not available various forage crops may be used under soiling conditions and thus we would be disposed to cut them in a green condition and feed to the cows the manger on the sod land even if the area of sod were very limited. Of course, this involves more labor than where you pasture the crops directly, but in our experience such crops as are satisfactory for grazing purposes are largely destroyed by the tramping, that is, they are not economically used for pasture purposes. Fall sown rye or winter and spring oats furnish excellent pastures in Georgia for the late winter and early spring. As soon as they are gone Bermuda may be relied on. If one plants German millet early and uses sorghum, corn, cowpeas and soy beans in proper succession, an abundance of green feed may be had from early spring until late fall. Naturally the silo should be depended on for the purpose of supplying a substitute for grass in the winter. Corn may be broadcasted on a limited area and cut for fodder. Oats may be allowed to head up and fed in the sheath. Millet may be grazed directly or cut and fed just as it begins to head out. If early maturing varieties of cowpeas are used they should be sufficiently matured to cut for forage about the first to the middle of July. Sorghum will not be ready until later in the season. We doubt the advisability of attempting to sow anything with Bermuda grass other than a light scattering of oats or millet. Any of the legumes would be liable to shade the ground and hold the Bermuda in check. In fact, you will get the best results from sodding the Bermuda and letting it alone until it gets well started.

TWO HUNDRED BUSHELS PER ACRE.

J. W. F., Harlem, Ga., writes: I have an acre of land that I want to make 200 bushels of corn on. It was in peas last year which were turned under and rye sown. The first of February I broadcasted nine 100-horse lods of stable manure and turned under rye and stable manure about ten inches deep. Would you lime the land? Am thinking of broadcasting a ton of equal parts of kainit and acid and using one ton of fertilizer as side application and 300 pounds of nitrate of soda.

I have another acre treated the same way on which I wish to grow cotton. What fertilizers should I use? We make a vigorous stalk. What fertilizer should I use on Spanish peanuts?

You have certainly acted wisely in applying your manure broadcast to your corn land and plowing under the rye stubble before it becomes too vigorous. The rye helps to hold the available plant food which the soil contained last fall when the pea crop was turned under, even though it did not add a large amount of vegetable matter to the soil. Lime this land at once, using at least one ton per acre of the finely ground raw rock. It should be scattered over the surface of the ground as soon as possible and worked in with a harrow, but not plowed down. We think the application of 300 pounds per acre of a high grade fertilizer formula should answer very well. We are sure that the use of the phosphorus and potash would be advisable. For such soils the applications of nitrate of soda as top dressings in which you have in view, there is liable to be a too rapid growth of stalk at the expense of grain unless there is an abundance of phosphorus and potash available. This would rise and fall on about one foot. The inside should be filled and packed with earth and a slively early crop laid thereon. Cinders should be used underneath the floor, as this helps to insure dryness. A wood overlay should be made on the cement floor, so as properly protect the cotton. It would be well to have an air space beneath the wood floor. The frame of the building should be of wood. The outside should be covered with wire lath and then a cement plaster put on the lath. A coating should be put on inside and out. The wire lath should be strung on about a No. 12 wire, which helps to give regularity. The roof may be made of galvanized iron, or you may use metal shingles, but we think they are not so desirable as the interlocked galvanized iron roofing. If you desire to build a granary inside your barn, you will first of all have to line it with matched lath then cover it with heavy sheet tin. The roof and floors would of necessity have to be covered, and the inside of the doors as well.

PEAS AND SWEET POTATOES AFTER OATS.

W. B. C., Glenwood, Ga., writes: I are about fifteen acres of spring oats which I will harvest in about a week. I wish to plant the most remunerative crop on this land after oats. Could you advise me? thinking of sowing to Unknown peas. Could I plant this land to advantage in sweet potatoes? Can sweet potatoes be safely rooted to place in the rows. Is there a fair demand for potatoes in carload lots?

There is no reason why you should not sow Unknown cowpeas after oats. It is well to break the land before planting the peas unless you happen to strike a season when conditions are just right for disking. In such case you can sometimes broadcast the peas and work them into the soil and secure a stand very quickly and without much labor, but in our experience it has paid us to plow the land. We generally use a gang plow for this purpose, breaking the land fairly shallow and then seeding the peas with a drill as we find we obtain larger yields and a more satisfactory stand by this practice. We advise the use of 300 pounds of a 10-14 under peas. There is no reason why some of this land should not be planted in sweet potatoes. In fact, the writer has made it a practice to plant sweet potatoes after Irish potatoes for several years past and has produced fine crops of sweet potatoes. Oat stubble turned under and properly worked up should furnish a good seed bed for potatoes. Remember that the land should be thoroughly prepared. We would fertilize it well with about a 9-3-5-6, and we think a minimum application should be 500 to 600 pounds. The use of the swamp drift in the drills will be helpful, provided the material is well decayed. We would put the leaf mold in the bottom of the furrow and mix it and the fertilizer well with the soil and then bed and set out the potato slips. There is a good demand for sweet potatoes at certain seasons of the year. Sometimes during the autumn the market is glutted, but if one can store them for a while they can often be sold to good advantage.

OATS AS A FOOD FOR COWS.

J. C., writes: Do you consider oats a balanced ration for cows? Also, about what should be fed with them? Do you think it advisable to feed cotton seed, cotton seed meal and hulls in the summer months? Have you ever known oats to kill a cow? Have never cut all they sowed.

Oats make an excellent food for dairy cows. They contain digestible nutrients in about the right proportion to meet the needs of this class of animals to the best advantage. We find that the oats can be fed to best advantage after grinding in most instances. It is also well to feed them with a small amount of coarse feed. While oats by themselves make an excellent ration, they are costly and can often be combined with hulls and cotton seed meal to good advantage. Where you are feeding a cow as much as 8 to 10 pounds of grain a day, feed two to three pounds of cotton seed meal and the balance of oats. Mix the two together and feed in equal proportions night and morning. The amount of grain to feed a cow will depend much on the flow of milk. There is no reason why a large amount of meal and hulls should be fed to cows in the summer time unless you have no pasturage. In that event we would advise you to plant crops which may be used for soiling purposes; that is, fed green when they are about sufficiently matured to make good hay. Of course, oats might kill a cow if she ate an unlimited quantity. I have seen animals gorge themselves on oats and then drink a large amount of water and then die from hoven or bloat. This was due to the fact that the owner did not know how to treat the animals promptly. There is no reason why the average dairy cow should be fed over 10 to 12 pounds of oats per day. The amount of grain to feed is about a pound to a pound and a half per 1,000 pounds of live weight when giving 2 to 2½ gallons a day; the ration should be adjusted to the milk flow.

YOU MAKE YOUR OWN ETERNITY

A Little Sermon to Make Us Think on Our Ways.

By Rev. Loy Warwick

Text: Luke's Gospel, 16:12-31.

THERE are no parables like the parables of the Gospel. The man of Galilee was a master painter. In the story of dives rich man and Lazarus He draws a picture of strange and sharp contrasts. There were two men who were neighbors. The one was very rich, dwelling in a palatial home whose imposing gateway looked down upon the vulgar crowd. He wore Tyrian purple and Egyptian Byssus and fared sumptuously every day. His life was selfish and sensual. God was not in all his thoughts.

At the gate of the rich man lies the beggar, weak, hungry, sick and friendless. He was glad to feast on the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table.

Now it came to pass that the beggar died; the rich man also died and was buried. We follow the Master as He follows the two men into the life after death. Stranger and more startling is the contrast we now behold. Things are turned about in a wonderful way. We see that that which was highly esteemed among men is an abomination in the sight of God. Here the rich man is the poor man and the poor man is the rich one. The standards of heaven upset all our ideas and measurements. His ways are not as our ways nor His thoughts as our thoughts. Now the poor man is blessed and the rich man is distressed. Lazarus lies in Abraham's bosom while the other is enveloped in flames. The beggar of earth has all the pleasures of Paradise, while the other begs for a drop of water to cool his tongue.

"O well," says some one, "this is just a parable and not to be taken too literally." So it is. We are not to take parables too literally. We must be careful how we interpret them and not make them teach what Jesus did not mean to teach.

But these stories of Jesus were more than word pictures. They held essential truth in solution. "Abraham's bosom," "this flame" and the "great gulf fixed" are doubtless figures of speech used to convey great truths to our minds. Perhaps they have been used to teach doctrines foreign to our Lord's purpose in the parable.

But when we elliminate all the figurative coloring of the parable there is still left the truth that heaven and hell are tremendous realities, whose pleasures and whose pains are too deep for our sounding.

LESSON OF THE PARABLE

We make our own eternity. This is one truth taught by the parable. God is a sovereign and He made man free. Life and death, good and evil—both sides of the great gulf—are set before this strange creature called man.

That boy yonder is making his own life, his own manhood, his own happiness and usefulness in the years to come. It is with him, very largely, to say what he is going to do and be.

His parents, his teachers, his pastor, his friends cannot prevent him, cannot save him if he deliberately rejects the good for this life and chooses the evil.

Who does not believe that Jesus desired to save Judas? And Judas had the same chance, the same grace, the same Lord that the others had.

Lazarus was not saved just because he was a poor man. Nor was Dives lost because he wore purple and fine linen and fared sumptuously every day.

One man chose to walk in the way that leads to life. The other selected the way of ease and pleasure and selfishness with his eyes open. He knew that to choose these things was to reject God and imperil his soul.

We make our own eternity and this life furnishes all the material we need for the task. We need no angels, or departed friends to come and show us the way. "I am the way, the truth and the life," said Jesus. And He is made unto us wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption.

I know a brave man who is now —who has not made good in the world. Failure is written large on all his life. And he sees it now, when it is too late for anything but a partial recovery.

But his father and mother are not to blame. He had a wealth of opportunity which he wasted in prodigal living.

For your happiness here and hereafter the good Father has given you all you need. What are you making of life's good material as it daily go by? Are you building stately mansions for your soul? Are you laying up treasure where moth and rust do not corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal?

Joseph forgives his brethren. Gen. xlv:1—vlvi:7.

Golden Text—Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. Ps. cxxxiii:1.

(1.) Verses 1-4—Is it ever wise when our hearts are greatly moved to give vent to our feelings before strangers? Why?

(2.) Which is the better, when in great joy or sorrow, to repress our feelings or give vent to them as Joseph did?

(3.) How would you justify Joseph for putting his brethren through such torture as he did?

(4.) Let this scene engrave itself on your imagination, and then say what the thoughts and feelings of these men were as they stood before Joseph at this dramatic moment. (This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by members of the club.).

(5. Does a sin-twenty-two years old, when it is resurrected, give the conscience the same acute sense of guilt as a sin more recently committed? Give your reasons.

(6.) What was it that at that moment brought to Joseph such intense feeling that he could not keep from sobbing aloud?

(7.) Verses 5-8—Was Joseph's advice that they "Be not grieved nor angry with yourselves" wise or foolish, and why?

(8.) What evidence is there, if any, that God did really send Joseph into Egypt?

(9.) Granted that God sent Joseph into Egypt, would you say or not, and why, that God had anything to do with his brothers selling him into Egypt as a slave?

(10.) Would you say that Joseph's brothers were as guilty as if Joseph had lived and died a slave? Give your reasons.

(11.) Verses 9-13—As a rule, is the love of grownup sons as tender toward their parents as when they were children?

(12.) Are grownup sons under obligation to God to care for their aged parents if they so need? Why?

(13.) Would you say, and why, that a good child always go to heaven? Is the success of a son as if it were his own success?

(14.) Verses 14-15—What can you say in commendation of grownup men, brothers, telling, with tears, how much they love one another?

(15.) Verses 16-20—When we find such princely generosity in a so-called heathen, as in this Pharaoh, would you say, and why, that it was inspired by our God?

(16.) Verses 21-24—Seeing Joseph gave Benjamin so very much more than he gave the others, did they have any right to be offended? Why?

(17.) Verses 25-28—Give a word picture of the feelings when he realized that Joseph was yet alive.

(18.) Chapter xlvi:1 1-7—How many persons composed Jacob's company which went into Egypt?

(19.) In what manner had Jacob been accustomed to have visions of God?

20.) May a Christian now expect God to reveal to him anything other than through his reason? Give your reasons.

Lesson for Sunday, June 15, 1913. Jacob Before Pharaoh. Gen. xlvi:28—xlvii:12, 28-31.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR DEPARTMENT

BY PHILIP T. SAMUEL.

The international topic for today's meeting is, "Seek peace, and pursue it," the Bible reference being 1 Peter iii:8-15.

More and more each year is the dream of the altruist for universal peace among all nations of the world being realized. Notwithstanding the wars an drumors, of wars, the fact that the great nations have not perceptibly reduced their armaments, and that diplomatic relations between countries not infrequently become strained, it is none the less a fact that never in the history of the world has there been the feeling of fraternity among all mankind as exists today. And this is what makes for peace, and this is where Christian endeavor, a worldwide fellowship, makes its beneficent purpose felt. Not by a costly peace propaganda alone can peace among nations be attained but by striving to follow the precepts of the Prince of Peace, upon whom the Endeavorer leans for strength.

At Central Congregational church the meeting at 7 o'clock this evening will be lead by Mr. Paul Sutton. The meeting at North Avenue Presbyterian church, this evening, will be led by Mr. C. M. Anderson. The weekly meeting of the Moore Memorial Presbyterian society is held on Wednesday evenings in connection with the midweek prayer meeting of the church.

During the summer months while the pastor, Rev. Ricard Orme Flinn, is absent, the North Avenue Presbyterian society will conduct the midweek prayer meetings of the church, probably having a dual leadership for each meeting.

The flower and literature committee of the Central oCngregational society, which distributes magazines to hospitals during the winter, is now engaged in taking flowers to these institutions. Last summer the society distributed over 1,000 bouquets to the hospitals and the members of the committee hope to do even better this year.

An election of officers for the ensuing six months will be held next week by the West End Christian society. Mr. John W. Crenshaw is president of this society, which took a prominent part in the revival services recently held in the West End Christian church.

Few societies in the country can boast of a Christian Endeavor chorus the equal of the one in North Avenue Presbyterian church. Under the able leadership of Mrs. E. E. Egan, chairman of the music committee, a strong chorus has been formed from members of the society and many favorable comments have been made on its work at the regular prayer meetings as well as on other occasions.

Just two months ago a Christian Endeavor society with seventeen members, was orgaized in the First Christian church at Athens, Ga. The society now has seventy-five active members, and a junior society has been formed. The society plans to place the Christian Endeavor World in the home of every member and will have an ice cream social in the near future to raise the necessary funds. The society was organized by Miss Mamie Lanford, Christian Endeavor field secretary for Georgia.

Third "John Ames-Rover" Story By George Randolph Chester

CHAPTER I.

OVER between the merry-go-round and the pathetic little ticket-switchback John Ames saw a doll-like young girl standing uncertainly alone, with the sunlight shimmering on her curly hair.

In the next instant half a dozen slouchy young men, undersized but swaggering, swept from the corner of the dilapidated Pretzel Garden and surrounded her.

"Hello, Curlie," said one of the mob, the one with the ugly scar across his mouth.

They all laughed and prepared to take part in this entertaining new game; but the girl, too frightened to scream, darted her way through them like a golden eel, and, seeing nowhere else to go, ran straight toward tall John Ames, fixing on him the roundest blue eyes he had ever seen.

There was not much opportunity for a thrilling rescue. The Mud Creek gang made a comprehensive estimate of the athletic-looking, black-haired stranger, and swaggered away, pretending to laugh in a care-free, light-hearted manner.

Events followed rather precipitately. An iron-jawed, thick-bodied man, with a leg and an arm on each side of him, rushed from behind the switchback, dashed into the Mud Creek gang, singled out the young man with the ugly scar on his mouth, grabbed him by the back of his coat collar and pelted him on the ear with a fist which was crowded with big, rough knuckles.

A close-cropped full beard, topping a short, solid, prosperous-looking man, came running across the grounds from the popcorn stand.

"Daddy!" cried the golden-haired one, deserting the arm of John Ames, to which she had clung for a frightened instant, and ran toward the beard.

A procession passed, consisting of the iron-jawed man, the conductor of the merry-go-round, two tough waiters, and the "barker" for the fortune-teller booth, all kicking the leader of the Mud Creek gang towards the front gate.

"Thank you," said the beard to John Ames. The portion of face which was visible was white with anger, as he drew the arm of his daughter through his own.

"I'm glad to have been here," returned Ames pleasantly. He felt, rather than saw, the absolutely round blue eyes fixed on him, and it was their blueness more than their helplessness which he afterwards remembered.

Having strained itself to remember the courtesies of the occasion, the beard whirled, and had started on a bee-line for home when the iron-jawed man hurried back, a little out of breath.

"That's a rotten shame, Mr. Houston," he abjectedly apologized. "It's a new gang, and they was never out here on Monday before. They won't"—

"That's about it," acknowledged Ames, who had sought rest in many climes, and had found it in the eyes of no woman.

"Now he won't come back any more!" grustly mourned the iron-jawed man.

Ames looked after the retreating beard with a frown of condemnation.

"They shouldn't have been here," he criticised.

The iron-jawed man inspected Ames slowly before he answered.

"Why not?" he growled. "This is a respectable place on Monday afternoons."

"Isn't it the rest of the week," smiled Ames.

The other man was honest.

"It's rotten," he admitted. "It was a good, clean play, when it was new, but the roughnecks took it. They always do."

Ames looked speculatively about the place. It was pitifully run down, and its tawdry little efforts at gaiety was like the rouge on a withered woman.

"You're the proprietor, I take it?" he guessed.

"Joe Wilks," was the answer, not untinged with a certain aggressive claim on respect.

"You're not making much money."

The proprietor of Wilks Park again studied the stranger slowly. His answer to that with most people would have been to mind their own business; but Ames wasn't that kind of a man. Wilks, somehow, had a vague feeling akin to that with which he talked to a doctor.

"You win," he admitted. "I owe you a drink."

"All right," laughed Ames easily, and walked over with him to one of the wobbly old tables in the weather-warped Pretzel Garden.

Ames stated his preference for a bottle of beer, and was conscious of two round blue spots before his eyes.

"You should make this place pay," he advised. "This town is prosperous; and it needs a good recreation park."

"If you show me how to make it pay, I'll cut you in on it," gloomily promised the proprietor.

"It shouldn't be a difficult problem," mused Ames, whom a badly managed business, of any sort, distressed immediately. "The first thing to do is to clean out these toughs."

Joe Wilks looked at him indignantly. "I want a little piece of change, don't I?" he demanded. "They're the only customers I got."

"They're the only ones you will have, so long as they are here," Ames earnestly advised him. "A decent man spends more money than a tough. I'll bet the gentleman who was here today with that little girl would spend more money than ten of that gang you put out."

"He's rented a $5 William every time he came on the lot!"

Ames was silent for a moment.

"Houston, you said his name was, I think," he suggested, and again he had that illusion of two round, blue spots before his eyes.

"Peter G. Houston," responded Joe Wilks with a sigh. "He has the grandest little business there is; collecting interest on his money. Makes me sore to lose him! Why, he's brought that yellow-headed kid out here every Monday since she wore knee dresses, and she's about 18 now. It'll bust little Maizie all up not to come here any more. Why, say, I've picked her up out of the mud many a time. She'd always stop crying for a pretzel."

Ames suddenly recognized the identity of those round, blue spots before his eyes. They were the appealing stare of Maizie Houston.

"And she can't come here any more," he regretted.

CHAPTER II.

*'M afraid I was short this after-*noon."

John Ames, drinking a lonesome after-dinner mint at the bar of his hotel, turned to find the beard beside him.

"I didn't notice it," he pleasantly replied.

"I was too mad to be decent," Peter G. Houston went on.

"You were quite justified," said Ames. "Will you join me?"

"No, thanks," responded Houston. "I just happened to see you here, and remembered that I owed you an apology.

"You have an unusually tender conscience," laughed Ames. "I had a talk with the proprietor out there after you left. He's not such a bad fellow."

"Any failure is a bad fellow," declared Houston, with a movement of his jaws which set his close-cropped beard violently forward. "I'll never go near Wilks Park again."

"That's what Wilks predicted," returned Ames, with a musing smile. "He seemed more worried by the fact that your daughter would miss her week's pleasure than by the loss of your patronage."

Houston's eyes, which were blue, softened.

"He always made a fuss over my girl," he acknowledged, and then he smiled whimsically. "I don't know what I shall do now. The only thing I can see to do is to build a merry-go-round and a roller coaster on my back lot."

"It wouldn't be quite the same," Ames reminded him. "Why don't you help Wilks, instead, to turn his park into a decent place. The town needs it."

"Why don't I walk on the water?" Houston wanted to know in return. "Because I am not the maker of miracles."

"That wouldn't be a miracle," Ames assured him. "It would merely be good business. A rough resort like that is a detriment, not only to its immediate locality, where property values are always lowered by it, but to the entire city, and, consequently, to your business interests whatever they are."

"There's no argument possible on that," agreed Houston. "I think I'll take a creme de menthe, Tom. This to the bartender. "However, an investment of that sort isn't very attractive."

"No, that's true," mused Ames. "There wouldn't be enough money in it to make it worth while, if one were bent on money alone."

"There are other things," acknowledged Houston, with a reminiscent smile. "I think I'd win the enthusiastic applause of my daughter, if I were to invest a few thousands in that place, and were able to pick its patronage by invitation."

"There is always at least one practical way to do anything you want," he *observed, as one announcing a princi-*ple in which he thoroughly believes. "The only problem is to find the right man."

"You talk like the right man," chuckled Houston. "Can't we induce you to rejuvenate Wilks Park?"

"I'm afraid not," smiled Ames, a certain wistfulness coming into his eyes. "It isn't that the business doesn't attract me, because I have dabbled in all of them more or less; but I haven't seen anything in the town, as yet, which made me care to stay here."

"Lord, how free and footloose you sound!" envied Houston. "Do you mean to say that you go into business, any old kind at all, only when you happen to like the town you're in?"

"That's about it," acknowledged Ames, who had sought rest in many climes, and had found it in the eyes of no woman.

"Then stay here long enough to give us a good amusement park," urged Houston, half in jest and half in earnest. "Show me a convincing plan, and I'll back you, if you need backing."

"I certainly would need backing," Ames told him. "I never experiment with my own money. However, I don't see any place in this proposition even for your funds. The bark alone would not yield frenzied finance profits."

"If you think of a brilliant scheme, tell me," looked Houston, and, thanking Ames more formally for his opportune services of the afternoon, he went away.

Ames strolled into the lobby and lit a cigarette, looking out with unseeing eyes on the jostling passersby. Before him he saw two round, blue spots, Poor kiddy! She couldn't have her playground!

Suddenly Ames grinned and returned quickly to the bar.

"Do you know where I'd be likely to find Mr. Houston at this hour?" he inquired of "Tom."

"Try the Valley City club," advised Tom, with a look at the clock. "I think this is his stud-poker night."

Ames 'phoned the Valley City club and located Houston.

"This is Ames, amusement park promoter," he stated, by way of identification.

"Oh," returned Houston. "No wonder I couldn't place the name of Ames, when the boy brought me the card."

"I've found a way to make a decent Wilks Park profitable."

There was a moment of silence.

"Say, suppose you step over to the club," invited Houston.

ALRIGHT, John, get busy," reported Peter G. Houston, two weeks later. "I've cleaned up my share of the work."

Thereupon John Ames went out to see the proprietor of Wilks Park. He found that gentleman nursing an eye the color of an egg-plant.

"Hello, sport," greeted Wilks, placing Ames, after a fractional thought. "You see that Mud Creek gang got me."

"They that live by the fist shall die by the fist," grinned Ames. "How's business, Mr. Wilks?"

"Rotten, thank you," responded Wilks, in deep discouragement. "Saturday night's a riot, and the rest of the week's a funeral."

"Let's make a big business out of it," suggested Ames cordially.

"The same dope you handed out before," laughed Wilks. "You know what I told you that time."

"I came out to talk definite business with you," said Ames, leading the way to the idle merry-go-around, and sitting in a scarlet chariot. "If I guarantee to increase receipts, will you give me one-fourth of the net increase, for the next two years?"

"Would I take a twenty-dollar gold piece?" and Joe Wilks laughed, a process which made a tremendous difference in his face. "What kind of a guarantee are you talking about?"

"United States money," Ames quickly stated.

Joe Wilks, whose face was separated into two broad parts when he smiled, now performed that operation.

"Led me to it," he directed.

"Of course there's a string to it," Ames continued. "You'll be given ten thousand dollars for improvements, on a loan of easy terms, and you will conduct the place as I say. If, at the end of next season, you haven't more than doubled your business, you may cancel your loan."

Joe Wilks lit a cigar, and his hand trembled.

"Where do I get the money?" he wanted to know, with a lingering trace of suspicion.

"Peter G. Houston," said Ames.

Joe Wilks climbed out of the scarlet chariot immediately.

"What's the first thing to do?" he inquired.

"Close down the plant," grinned Ames.

"Hey, you, Bill!" roared the vigorous voice of Joe Wilks. "Turn every sucker out, and lock the gates."

CHAPTER IV.

A SWARM of carpenters and of painters infested Wilks Park, and, wherever John Ames passed, something changed. Joe Wilks followoned him around like a guardian shadow, and, wherever Joe passed something quivered.

Looking up from the plans for a new roller coaster, Ames beheld two blue spots before his eyes.

"Good morning, Mr. Ames," sang the flutelike little voice of Maizie Houston. "My daughter, Maizie, Mr. Ames," explained Peter G. Houston with a laugh. "I hope she won't be in the road."

"If she is, we'll move the road," promised Joe, cutting his face in two. This was the first time he had seen Maizie since she had left the park forever.

"I won't be in the road at all, will I Mr. Ames?" pleaded Maizie.

He laughed at her. Her childlike in genuousness was refreshing.

"Not, perhaps," he gally assured her. "How would you like to run the merry-go-round, all by youself?"

"Oo-oo-h!" and her voice died away in a delightful coo.

"We'll start the engine for you," promised Ames, and Joe Wilks ran to make himself useful.

"I'm afraid Maizie's spoiled, Mr. Ames," boasted her father, viewing her fondly, as she dashed over to the absurd little engine. "How's the lake coming on?"

"Splendidly," answered Ames, leading the way over past the remains of the one-time switch-back. "The 4 bridges for the canal are almost ready to set up, and I think that, by another week, we shall be able to turn in the water in."

Houston, with a growing pride in the transformation they were effecting, walked all around the grounds, and smiled, with the return of childhood, as the inspectee, the gaudy "fronts" which rose on every hand.

"I saw the chief of police last night," he chuckled. "I won him over, at last."

They saw passing the merry-go-round, when Houston reported this interesting fact. The little engine was hissing, and its shrill whistle was piping, while Maizie Houston stood proudly at the lever. The merry-go-round was whirling at top speed, and wide Joe Wilks sat astride the horse with the green tail.

"Oh, Mr. Ames! Oh, daddy!" called Maizie, in a delighted voice, and stopped the engine with a jerk. "No, Joe; you mustn't climb down yet. Mr. Ames and daddy, pick out your horses. Take the outside ones, where I can see you, and don't sit close together."

"Mr. Ames is busy," protested her father.

"Oh, no he isn't; are you, Mr. Ames?" and her eyes had the softness of a summer evening sky.

"I've been wanting to ride that pink-striped horse ever since I've been here," acknowledged Ames, rather shocked with himself, and swung his long legs astride the wooden beast in question. "Come on, Houston. Take that intelligent racer with the freckles."

"Tee! Tee! Tee!" shrilled the screechy little whistle, and they were off, running slowly and smoothly, then at furious speed, then stopping abruptly, and jerking onward again, until John Ames, who had frequently crossed in stormy weather, recognized a certain familiar moistness in his mouth, and felt that he began to look green.

"Oh, I've had a lovely time!" announced Maizie, in parting. "I'm coming out often, may I?" and she took her round, blue eyes with her.

THERE came another day. For the first time in a week, Maizie Houston, who had been general nuisance and obstruction, did not come. John Ames, superintending the construction of absurdly childish *things for the amuse*ment of grownups, missed the youngster seriously. She had been on every dangerous scaffolding in the park; she had dragged Joe Wilks and her father and himself through every uncomfortable experience which an active and ingenious mind could devise; she had brought back to John Ames the spirit of childhood itself, and, now, that the day wore on, and she did not come, he found himself more lonely than he could have imagined.

"Where's Maizie?" compalined Joe Wilks, watching a carpenter nail on the eye of a gigantic dragon. "The place looks like a rainy day without her."

"Yes, don't it," agreed John. "She's a most fascinating child!"

"Child!" objected Joe. "She's eighteen. She was introduced into society last winter. She'll probably be married this year."

That was true! She was eighteen! She was, after all, a woman! John Ames went about his work mechanically. They were painting green griffins, and yellow unicorns, and red devils all around the park; but John Ames saw nothing but blue!

"Hello, John," cooed a soft little voice.

He jumped as if he had been struck, and turning, looked deep into the eyes which had haunted him all day. He clasped her hand, and knew the soft, warm tingle of it, and in that moment, he believed that his search was over.

CHAPTER VI.

IT was Children's day at Playground Park, formerly "Joe Wilks'. That paradise of pleasure was to be formally opened on the following day, which was Saturday; but, on this occasion, there was to be no money taken at the gate.

As early in the day as 10 o'clock Lemper's famous band came swinging down the renamed Pleasure avenue to Playground Park, followed by an elephant and two camels and a cordon of police, and the contents of the Orphans' Home, and the city schools, by swarms, platoons and streams, and the newsboys with their own band, and then just children, miles of them!

By this token, the town knew that *Playground Park had come into exist*ence, and, if there was a child in that procession who did not acquire the stomach-ache and have its spinal column jolted painfully, that child was to blame.

Everything was free, rides, shows even to the popcorn and lemonade and peanuts; everything!

Maizie Houston sat in the little private balcony of the new cafe, with her father and John Ames, and at one period, around noon, she remained perfectly quiet for a minute and a quarter; beyond that she was fairly active.

They started in by declaring that she must, under no circumstances, go down into the jostling grounds on this packed occasion; but, before 2 o'clock in the afternoon, they were fighting lanes for her, through and through the mass. That is to say, she had been pleasant children, fancy of yesterday, was the woman's imperious whim of today and he obeyed the woman even more promptly than he had the child. He knew, at last, that he had been so interested in remodelling Wilks Park. Those round, blue eyes had held him there!

CHAPTER VII.

OPENING day! Joe Wilks stood at the gate, shrouded in gloom, early in the morning.

"If they wouldn't come in when the gate was free, how do you expect them to pay ten cents?" he worried. "That's the price of two beers."

"I don't expect those people but once," said John Ames, grimly, and he looked back to where his "special policemen," all lumpy men, were waiting impatiently for their guests.

A woman with two children and a lunch basket, alighted from the street car, walked calmly up to the gate, paid 10 cents for herself and 5 cents each for the children. Joe Wilks looked at her and shook his head. Two women with a child apiece came on the next car. They paid their way in, and wandered about dolefully, looking at the painted "fronts" and the yellow lake and waiting for the music. Two cars came by and brought no one; then a car came with seven.

"Let's go and get a drink," proposed Joe Wilks, who was perspiring. "The gate's took in enough to pay for it."

"I'll send you the drink, if you must have it," offered Ames. "I want you right here to do the picking until we close tonight."

Lemper's band came out, with gay music, but they brought a scant party of customers behind them.

"It's started in too early in the day," soothed *Ames, who was partic*larly lonely. It had been decided that the well-dressed woman, with perfectly round, blue eyes, would be better off at home on this occasion. "Isn't that one of your friends, Joe?"

He indicated a well-dressed young man with a cigar clamped in the corner of his mouth, and his cap pulled down over one eye.

"That's Muggsy Durkey," whispered Joe, with a gleam of satisfaction, and watching his own work with careful excitement, he pulled over and Muggsy Durkey found himself walking along beside the other customers, but separated from them by a light little white fence.

Muggsy paid no attention to that trifling barrier, for he was locating the bar, and the dance floor. Suddenly he found himself walking in at a right gate, which promptly slammed behind him. There was a neat little barrier beyond the gate, entirely surrounded by solid fence, and in the enclosure were three tables and settlement!

They wasted no time with Muggsy Durkey; they exchanged with him no word; they merely beat his head half off, by way of a hint, and hustled him back down the narrow passageway to a barn-like building, fenced off from the rest of the lot. Here they tied him to a chair, in the presence of half a dozen other special officers, with clubs. It was not intended that Muggsy should spread the word. After the party had closed for the night, Muggsy would receive another hint, and be thrown out.

Muggsy was joined with a fellow with a bleeding nose, then one with a black eye, then five members of the Mud Creek gang beaten fairly tender. Towards evening the chief of police came back to the barn-like structure to inspect this high-handed outrage, and chuckled and went away.

The grounds, by this time, were a sea of bobbing heads, and a babble of laughing voices. The blare of the band, mingled with the shrillest tune of the new carousel, and the screech of horns, and the clatter of bells, and the toot of whistles and the whirring of telegraphs, and the wailing of youngsters, and the cries of the "barkers," and the rush of the roller coasters, and all other discords which the spirit of carnival evoked, formed a harmony celestial to the ears of Joe Wilks!

"You win, John!" he excultantly cried, for the twentieth time since 3 o'clock. "You win in a walk. Old pal! Houston's money is safe!" He paused, still sitting over the gate, and 'picking them out' to watch the one of the lumpy "specials" dart into a crowd, procure a young man who was "fresh," and give him a warming with the murder behind it. "Maizie ought to have been out today. There ain't no toughness here."

"You'll be successful as long as you handle it in this way," promised Ames with a smile, and came down from the perch.

It was absurd to have kept Maizie away, but both her father and he felt so responsible for the child. She was but a child, after all. No, she was a woman, with all a woman's charm, and all a woman's soul, and all a woman's capacity for joy and sorrow. She was there alone today, except for her adoring aunt; alone at home, unhappy, bearing in silence the disappointment they had forced on her against her earnest protest. Her round, blue eyes haunted him, and their reproach was even more poignant when Peter G. Houston walked delightedly up to him. Houston's eyes were nothing like Maibie's, but they were a piece of the same color.

"Stroke of genius, John!" he exclaimed. "When we get through with this, I want to talk with you about other matters, in which I'd like to hand you an interest."

"Plenty of time for that," laughed Ames. "This looks pretty good just now. Joe Wilks is happy as a king. He tells me he's going to get a frock coat and look the part!"

"Joe has a right to be happy, enthusiastically returned Houston. "We all have. Why, John, my boy, do you know what you and I have options on $200,000 worth of property surrounding Playground park, and that it will double in value within the next two years?"

"I shouldn't wonder," calculated Ames. "How much would you give me for my share tonight?"

"Thirty thousand," promptly estimated Houston. "I'd give you an additional five thousand for your contract with Joe Wilks. I'd make money out of it; but I'd be taking the gamble."

"I don't think I'll close with you just now," laughed Ames, and went out of the smoking place for quiet.

Poor Maizie! The round, blue eyes of that dear little woman haunted him with their helpless pleading, with their *demand on his protection, on his bles*sess, on his kindness, on his care!

He jumped on a street car, headed for the Houston home!

CHAPTER VIII.

JOHN slipped up through the shrubbery of the Houston grounds. He had seen the golden head of Maizie on the screened end of the veranda and he wanted to surprise her.

She was sitting quietly by herself, crooning a cradle song, in that delicioulsy flute-like voice, and busied earnestly with something in her lap. It was a golden-haired doll, and she was curling its burnished tresses, so like her own.

John Ames stopped, sobered! What phantasy of mind had been on him. He had seen women, and grown women, playing with dolls, but not like this! And he suddenly realized that mere number of years no more marks the difference between a woman and a child than it marks the difference between a child and a man. Something like humiliation crept upon him, that at thirty, after years of experience in all the paths where women walk, for that one whom he should know to be his mate, he should fall into this folly, which attacks every man at least once in his life; when he mistakes the father for him for love.

It was an indication of his fundamentally healthy mind, that presently he smiled, and crept stealthily away from the scene, grimly and he looked, and plunged into a toy shop, just before closing time, and bought the biggest and prettiest goldenhaired doll he could find.

With this in his arms, and enjoying *the friendly grins of the other passen*gers, he took a car and then a taxicab to the Houston house, and slipped up on the Houston porch, and held out the doll, before the astonished and delighted eyes of the little woman of Maizie. Her eyes could grow no rounder but they expanded in all their heavenly blueness.

"Oh, your darling, John Ames!" she cried, and, clapping his cheeks between her warm little palms, she kissed him smack on the mouth.

It was that kiss which took all the last vestige of woman from her, in John Ames' thought, and made her a baby again.

W'en Peter G. Houston came home an hour later he found Maizie and Ames on the floor, gravely discussing her family of dolls, with the Princess John in the seat of honor.

"Well, that's a hot occupation for a commercial genius!" exclaimed Peter G Houston, and grunted his way to the floor himself, where Maizie clasped bearded cheeks between her warm little palms and kissed him smack on the mouth.

"An ex-commercial genius," corrected Ames, with a smile. "I think I shall accept that offer of yours, and go away tomorrow."

"Hey, you, Bill!" roared Joe Wilks. "Turn every sucker out and lock the gates!"

They all laughed and prepared to take part in this entertaining new game.

A City Without Bosses

(Cleveland Plain Dealer.)

Philadelphia, notwithstanding its advantageous possession of a reform administration, finds herself unable to make substantial progress toward fundamental and lasting reform. Its form of government is made to order for corruption and boss rule and the bosses are strong enough to prevent a change.

Mayor Blankenburg, backed by the force of unanimous good citizenship, has made a determined effort to induce the state legislature to do away with the existing system, and has failed. A few reformers may hold office occasionally in Philadelphia, but the bosses do not lose their grip at Harrisburg.

Philadelphia is burdened by the antiquated bicameral legislative system. The two councils, "select" and "common," have a membership of 140. Each of councils has a committee need of two councils. The bosses are the only ones who feel the need. When the bosses are in power the city councils are admirable boss; while during the occasional reform administration they command ward off any dangerous attacks on the dominating alliance of contractors and politicians which exploits the city formerly love.

Philadelphia's good government proposal was the elimination of the existing councils and the establishment of a single chamber of fifty members. There was no opposition to the change voiced by any one honestly desirous of civic betterment. But the voice of the loosey carrries far more weight at Harrisburg than the voice of good citizenship. The reform proposition has been killed by an adverse report.

Cleveland, with all its flaws of government of various degrees of excellence, can scarcely remember the old days when it struggled along with two legislative bodies. At present when the city is endeavoring to devise the most convenient, scientific, practical form of administration, free from all possibility of boss dictation, the Ohio Columbian city may well be a little ashamed for the people of Philadelphia when they behold fetters too firmly riveted to be thrown off.

Market Plan Proposed for Farm Procuce

Lewis Spencer Daniel, managing director of the Manufacturers and Merchants' Association of Floyd county, proposes the following plan for a co-operative market:

"One of the main objects in organizing the Farmers and Merchants' Co-operative association of Floyd county was to gradually lead up to the co-operative market. The plan I have mapped out is a plausible one and a perfectly feasable one, original, yes. Nowhere in the world has it been tried to the exact which I propose. Now, Germany has her co-operative societies and markets, so has England and Italy. Their co-operative societies run particularly along financial lines with financial co-operation.

"The co-operative market, under the Farmers and Merchants' Co-operative association, will solve the problem thus:

"The co-operative market is located in the county site and is used also as a city market. It is in charge of a manager who receives the farmer's products and gives him a receipt for same. The farmer returns home or goes about his business. The manager of the market keeps well posted and knows how and where to dispose of the products; the products unsalable are canned or preserved in proper manner, so, when the farmer returns, he receive either cash or his products canned or in a state of preservation. There is no waste, no loss. A small cannery is in operation at the rear of the market. Should the farmer not care to take his canned products home with him, he may leave them to be sold in the cans. The manager of the market must be wide awake and keep posted on prices and markets and have always ready customers either in or out of the city. Rome, for instance, would have a ready market in Chattanooga and Atlanta.

ENCOURAGE SMALL FARMERS.

"The co-operative market would encourage the subdivision of farms; encourage small farmers; encourage the variation of crops. Our farmers, under this arrangement, could produce from ten to twelve crops a year, and would receive ready cash at least twelve times a year, instead of raising cotton, which brings him a very poor income once a year.

"In Rome today we pay 20 cents a pound for lettuce, about 10 cents per head. You can take one-twentieth of an acre and raise 1,000 heads of lettuce; that's $100 in cash, or $2,000 per acre from lettuce. Radishes would pay even better.

"By using canvassed hot-beds, our farmers can produce such a variety of table vegetables during the winter months as to be a source of constant income. If the farmer fails to find a market for his produce, that's his fault. However, the whole question is to be solved in the co-operative market and the Farmers and Merchants' Co-operative association.

PLAN BEING TRIED.

"I am trying out this plan in Floyd county and Rome. While the present progress may seem slow to some, to me it looks encouraging. When I have succeeded in this county the plans become national. There will spring from these efforts a national farmers and merchants' cooperative association and co-operative market that will solve a great problem for America. And I predict that in time this co-operative association will eventually carry with it co-operative finance.

"David Lubin tells me that I have the cart before the horse. I don't think so. All of these things I discussed personally with Mr. Lubin before he returned to the Financial and Agricultural College of the Universe at Rome, Italy. I am going to show Rome, Italy, that Rome, Ga., knows and does a few things. Mr idea differs with Mr. Lubin to the extent of teaching the farmer to make money before I teach him how to borrow money. A farmer who does not know how to make, who does not know how to make to borrow. When he learns how to make money he will have no trouble in borrowing—if he should then care to do so.

"By the time the American commission returns from the European school we will have graduated and gone into the business."

Royal Boulevardiers

(Special Cable to The Journal.)

PARIS—Alfonso XIII, of Spain, actually is wonder how many times within these six months his visit has been officially announced one day, to be as officially denied the next?

As a matter of fact, what with Franco-Spanish bickerings and Ferrer-ism, the king of Spain might not, to till quite lately, have been very welcome in Paris.

His unpopularity of course, was political, not personal, and as there is no longer any friction between the French and Spanish governments, the Parisians were very glad to see Alfonso XIII, for therefind his pluck and many exceedingly "sympathiques."

However, there was one man who will be sorry to see the last of him. And that is Mr. Hennion, the new perfect of police, who was responsible for the measures taken to ensure the safety of the royal guest.

Mr. Hennion, of course, a sort of royal guest. Most European monarchs visit anywhere or coming back from it visit Paris.

It is a blank week for Parisians in which some royalty, major or minor, is not their guest "between trains."

And the worst comes to the worst, they can always count on a couple of Russian Inexhaustible supply of grand dukes.

But the race of royal boulevardiers who knew Paris like "the palms of their pockets"—who were as much at home there as in their own palaces no more. Its last representative died in King George, of Greece.

NEWS OF ATLANA THEATERS

A bill of Keith vaudeville that will measure to the highest standard at the Forsyth will be the attraction at that theater this week, starting, as usual, with a matinee on Monday afternoon and continuing all the week, with daily bargain matinees and the popular night performances.

It appears that the Forsyth is going to repeat its wonderful success of last summer, when the theater was crowded on all floors at twelve performances every week. Some of the greatest stars in vaudeville made their first appearance in Atlanta during last summer, and, commencing with this week, other noted people and some of the always welcome favorites are going to help the management keep the theater busy.

There has been more real hot weather during the last two weeks than had been figured on, but the cooling plant and the ventilating system of the theater have added to its popularity to such a decree that a seat is sought for cool comfort as well as for entertainment.

Of the features making up the bill for this week one that promises to be a big novelty will be the first appearance here of Rochmm's Athletic Girls, a quintet of pretty misses who are expert in the art of boxing, wrestling and bag punching. This act has been one of the exclusive features in the principal Keith theaters all this winter season. It has proved to be one of the best drawing cards used in the circuit, and it has won triumphs on bills that have been headed by stars of the musical and dramatic world. The young ladies have become popular with the fair sex in many of the cities, and suggested the organization of athletic groups that since have become permanent among the ladies. The misses are clever in the art of self-defense, and in wrestling they offer a unique and interesting act. They are expert in bag punching, and declare the exercise to be superior to either tennis or golf. The Athletic Girls are being brought direct from New York and will return after their engagement on Saturday night, to sail early next week for a tour of Europe on their second visit to the other side.

Another feature will be Signor Travato, "The Eccentric Violinist." This man was discovered by Solinan, the composer, during a trip abroad, and Travato's engagement for vaudeville follows at once. The quality, technique and bowing of Travato's execution are said to be really out of the ordinary, and in addition to his eccentric qualities, musically inclined folks can count on a treat.

Chick Sale, the clever comedy protean entertainer, will present his famous sketch, "A Country School Entertainment." In this act Mr. Sale portrays all the characters, in type study and imagination. He will appear as a kid at school, and in a twinkling, full view of the audience, becomes the old man scamp of the village, and the quickly will switch to the "school marm," and so on through his unique and original act, appearing first in one character and then in another. Chick Sale is one of the big feature acts of modern vaudeville, and always will remain a favorite.

Gordon Pickens and his company of three other players, in their absurd comedy idea, "What Would You Do?" will fill a position on the bill that will add value to the show. Pickens is one of those jolly Walter Jones sort of fellows from whom fun fairly bumps. He has surrounded himself with a capable company, and, it may be anticipated that he is going to register a hit.

John and Mae Burke, in their oddity, "The Rag Time Soldier," surely will score close to the laughing hit of the bill. Miss Burke is a pretty and clever girl, and becomes popular in every place she visits. John Burke is simply the best character comedian of the new school. He is a dynamo of fun, a pianist, a dancer, a singer and a laugh winner. Last week, in one of the Keith theaters in New York, he was such an unusual success that he had to beg permission to retire during every performance. John and Mae Burke will be one of the comedy hits of the season.

Stella Maye and Margie Addis have a singing and talking comedy act that is exceptionally clever. These pretty girls are favorites over the circuit because of their charming and pleasing personality and ability to sing the newest songs in a fetching fashion. The Stelner Trio, a combination of grotesque comedy bar artists, will offer an act that will make things lively; and, all in all, the Forsyth is going to offer a vaudeville bill of extraordinary interest.

For the following week the headline feature will be Bud Fisher, of "Mutt and Jeff" fame, and on the same bill will be Pauline Welsby a dainty and pretty comedienne, who has many friends here.

Boyle Woolfolk is the sponsor for "Hiram at the Cabaret," the tabloid musical-comedy-vaudeville, the attraction for this week at the Bijou—10 cents admission, 10 cents extra for reserved seats.

If it was not for the fact that there have been several weeks of this style of entertainment at the Bijou, and that all of the combinations have made good, it might be a question as to whether a show in a regular theater could be any good at such prices.

Tabloid musical comedy, with its vaudeville trimmings, in a well ventilated and cool theater, with ample stage room for work, and plenty of effects for production, is an entertainment that suits exactly in warm weather. There is not a thing to worry about. It is all fun, music and song, dance and novelty. The shows are over in about an hour and a half.

"Hiram at the Cabaret" will be presented in two scenes. The first will show Hiram at home. After everything is arranged for a joy outing, Hiram is found in the second scene at a cabaret, and though there has been smart fun from the start, the fun gets funnier and keeps going. With a dozen pretty girls who make up the chorus department, and a number of clever principals, including comedians, the story is told in a capital way, only interrupted at such time as a musical number fits in nicely.

Wally Brooks, a comedian of the new school, said to be a comer, is the prime mover in all the fun. He is assisted ably by J. T. Hanson, Maybe Drew, Ed Crawford, Marie Miller and Helen Stanley.

The musical program, in charge of Al W. Beatty, will introduce ten numbers.

The cabaret is held (on the stage) on the top of a New York theater, and the effect is said to be most realistic. "Hiram at the Cabaret" has won favor all over the circuit, and in some places has hung up an attendance record that will hold all season.

The attraction goes on for two matinees on Monday and Saturday afternoons, one matinee each day the rest of the week, and two performances each night. The show is a good one, if reports are true, the theater is convenient and cool and comfortable, and a big week seems to be assured.

The GIRLS of "HIRAM AT THE CABARET" — BIJOU

Stage Letter

By Norman

NEW YORK.—Seldom has a more pulchritudinous chorus graced a musical production than that which dances and sings through "Iolanthe," the latest Gilbert and Sullivan revival at the Casino. With no desire whatever to "knock" Mr. Hopper or any of the other principals, it must be admitted that whoever selected the young women that fill the back of the stage had a great deal to do with making "Iolanthe" an attractive summer show.

One of the most interesting productions promised for the coming season is Henning Berger's "The Deluge," which will be offered by Arthur Hopkins, and will probably open in Chicago.

There is a curious reason why this play is to have its first American presentation in the Windy City instead of New York. Henning Berger, who is a native of Sweden, came to America in 1883 and went direct to Chicago. There he had a hard struggle. He was a street car conductor, a draughtsman, a reporter. One day, out of work and out of money, he stepped into the doorway of a saloon to get out of a shower. There, also seeking shelter, were several other persons whose conversation interested Berger, and they are now characters in "The Deluge."

Berger returned to Sweden several years ago, and "The Deluge" had its first production in Stockholm, where it scored a great success. Berger wants it to open in America in the city where he suffered and struggled, where its theme had its inception in his mind. It is one of the most unusual dramas ever written.

The theatrical season of 1912-13 comes to its close with a final musical comedy offering, "My Little Friend," at the New Amsterdam. The music is by Oscar Straus, the libretto by Harry B. and Robert B. Smith. The best thing in the piece is the singing of Lotta Hughes, a young woman who possesses much magnetism and charm, in addition to a fine voice. The score is not up to that of "The Chocolate Soldier."

One of Winthrop Ames' productions at his Little theater in the fall will be a dramatization of Arnold Bennett's novel, "Buried Alive," which has been one of the big successes of the past London season, under the name of "The Great Adventure."

* * *

Perhaps the best appreciation of the *public's preference in drama, as re*flected in the successes of the closing season, appears in the following bit of verse from the pen of P. G. Wodehouse, a playwright and co-author with John Stapleton of "A Thief for a Night," produced in Chicago this spring:

The other day I wrote a play; I thought it pretty good.
The plot was complicated, yet quite easily understood.
The dialogue was rather neat, and teemed with quiet fun,
And the part of James, the hero, was the best I've ever done.

But the manager said: "No, my boy; this stuff's no good to me;
This isn't the sort of drama that the public want to see.
It hasn't got a chance on earth, believe me, not a scrap.
Why, hang it all, your hero is a decent sort of chap!

"I've just gone through the whole four acts again, a second time,
And as far as I can see he don't commit a single crime.
That sort of thing is hopeless; it is sure to come to grief.
You must alter sinless Jimmy to a swindler or a thief."

So I took my blameless hero, for I needed the doubloons,
And rewrote his part completely. . . .
"Enter James. He steals one spoons."
"Exit J. with heroine's bracelet." 'Act three, curtain on the line.
James, I've smeaked six hundred milk cans!'" And the manager said, "Fine!"

And now each night the gallery with enthusiasm roeks
As my hero, with a hatpin, loots the baby's money box,
And the stalls, for once excited, make the welkin fairly ring
With plaudits at the deeds of James, the pocket-picking king.

Why Everybody Is Dancing

"I can but reiterate my approval of the tango and the one-step. The steps are from a technical basis, and if properly combined and executed they are graceful and beautiful."

Vernon Castle, who is the most accomplished dancer on the stage, described in New York the other day, how to do the tango.

"It isn't easy to tell exactly how the dance is done," he said, "but I shall do my best to put it into words. The dancers begin with an ordinary two-step and dip and bend in the regular manner, holding each other in the ordinary way. After the dip on the fourth bar of the music they change positions slightly, both dancing forward and stepping on opposite feet—that is, the man on his left, the girl on her right foot. This brings the two feet close together and would not seem to work out right, but it does. Dance and turn, dip and turn the foot at the fourth beat. Where regular tango music is played there is a slight pause at every fourth bar, which the dancers fill out by the dip.

KEEP THE BODY ERECT.

"Remember that the body must be carried very erect, the head high. The only movement is below the waist. The steps can be done forward, backward, to the side and in open position forward, but always with the dip and turn of the knee. Almost every couple have some variation of their own—dancing without touching, the girl with her arms extended, the man with his arm behind him, but always in perfect rhythm.

"In dancing forward to open position the steps must be of precisely the same length and the turn of the knee done at the same time and with the same amount of force. That is the whole trick in a dance that looks more complicated than it really is.

"The real tango dance by the right kind of people is just as clean and moral a dance as the waltz, and there is no earthly reason that I can conceive why it shouldn't become popular in fashionable society and as any function where dancing of any kind is permissible."

England to Benefit by New Tariff

LONDON, May 31.—The important of the proposed abolition and sweeping reductions of certain American tariffs, and the effect upon the protection movement in this country, cannot be overestimated. If there was any life left in the food tax campaign, and there was precious little in its strongest moment—this has certainly been entirely wiped out. The proposal to tax his food and the materials he uses has always been abhorrent to the British working man, and during the past few years there has been abundant illustration that nothing will shake him in that conviction.

The same revolt against the oppressive burdens of protection has been slowly but surely gaining ground in the United States, and the suggested abolition of tariffs on certain articles, particularly food stuffs and clothing, is an indication that the American workers realize that money is worth only what it buys.

With higher wages, the increased cost of living puts the American worker in a wrose position than his brother on this side of the Atlantic, and President Wilson has himself dismissed as "audacious and impudent" the pretence that high protection is a benefit to the worker.

At the conference of charities and correction four years ago it was reported that a family—man, wife, and three children under working age—in New York state towns, could not live upon a wage of $600 a year without assistance. Consider what the reduction of tariffs will mean to such a family!

The American worker has also learned that for every dollar collected for national revenue the tariffs have enabled the trusts to collect five.

ROOSEVELT BROKE PLEDGE.

I was over there eight years ago, when Roosevelt was seeking election, and pledged himself to control the trusts and reduce the tariffs. He was in office four years, but did nothing in that direction. Inceed, during his presidency the trusts increased by leaps and bounds, and grew stronger every year. Then, when Mr. Taft sought the suffrage of the people, four years ago, he also pledged himself to reduce the tariffs. During his administration the famous Payne-Aldrich tariff was introduced, and the country soon found that its general effect was anything but beneficial.

Not only was its effect on commerce noticeable, but it gave a fillip to the trusts, and helped to swell the burdens of the wage earner.

These are the reasons why Mr. Wilson has been sent to the White House and placed in a more powerful position than ever Grover Cleveland was by having a Democratic majority in the house of representative and the senate. Although the trusts will make desperate efforts to resist any reduction of the tariffs, the feeling of the country is so keen that this should be sufficient to enable the will of the people to be carried out.

The most significant thing from our standpoint is the clean sweep the Underwood bill will make of duties on foodstuffs. This should be a great lesson to tariff reformers in this country. The United States can easily produce sufficient food for its own consumption, and if they consider it inimical to the interests of their people to have duties on food stuffs, what earthly reason can our protectionists put forward for taxing food?

Second Greatest Fleet

(Special Cable to The Journal.)

LONDON.—The American navy department is sending to Europe the greatest naval force which has ever been assembled under the flag of the United States—no fewer than twenty-one battleships.

The fleet will cross to Gibraltar and pay a series of visits to all the principal ports in the Mediterranean.

The cruise is intended to advertise to the nations of Europe the naval power of the United States, which, contrary to popular belief, possesses the second greatest fleet in the world. The fleet will not visit any of the ports of the British Isles, nor will it be seen in the North sea.

British hospitality will, of course, be extended to the crews at Gibraltar and Malta, and probably also at one of the Egyptian ports.

This demonstration of American naval power is hardly likely to be without effect in British naval opinion.

Throughout the British fleet it is felt that injury to the spirit and character of the service is being done by the policy of continuous concentration in home waters.

A large number of officers would like to see the strength of the navy so calculated and disposed as to allow one battle squadron, with its associated battle cruiser, or armored cruiser, squadron, to be cruising from time to time in distant waters.

It is felt that it would be an immense gain if arrangements were periodically made to release one section of the first fleet for cruising far afield in support of British political and commercial interests, and in demonstration of the obiquity of the British navy and the homogeneity of the seas which unite the various parts of the empire.

First Aid by Queen

(Special Cable to The Journal.)

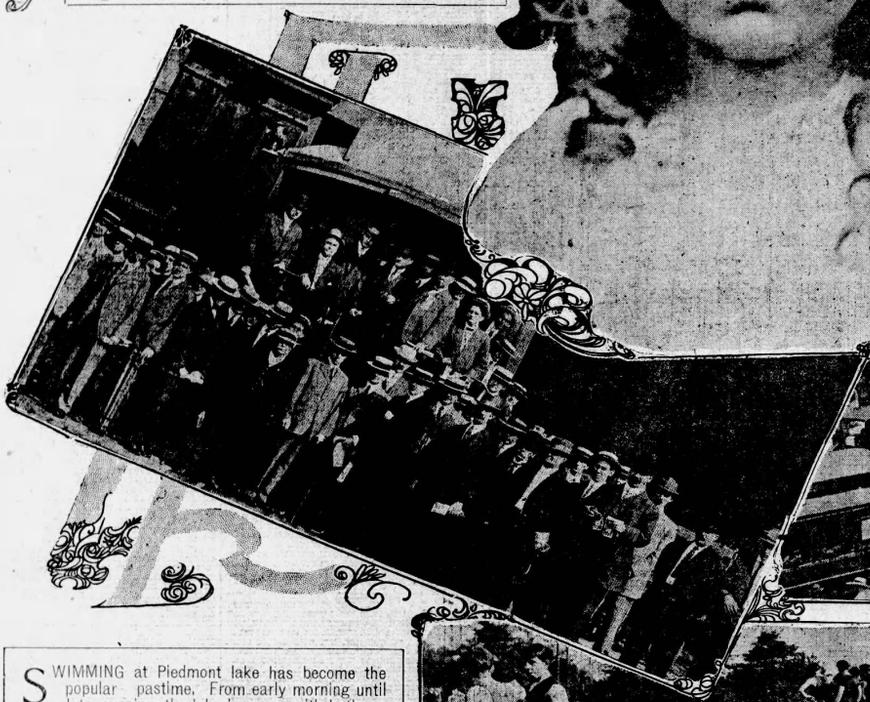
MADRID.—A few days ago the queen of Spain, while motoring with Princess Henry, of Battenberg, noticed a man lying unconscious by the roadside. Her majesty ordered the chauffeur to stop. Both the royal ladies went to the man's assistance and succeeded in restoring him to consciousness. They had him placed in the motor and brought back to Madrid. The incident spread very quickly, and the queen and her mother were greeted by large numbers of people who appreciated the unostentatious act of kindness.

Pictorial Review

A VERY IMPORTANT part of the Society Circus at Druid Hills on Saturday a week ago was the class of little ladies, four years old each, and out of this number Miss Murdoch Walker was chosen for first prize.

In the busy street scene is shown Peachtree at Five Points. All modes of conveyance, from automobiles to a Georgia Mule, are pictured.

FOR THE PURPOSE of seeing how Chattanooga has established a manufacturers' exhibit, the leading manufacturers of Atlanta paid a visit to the Tennessee city, and came away convinced that such an exhibit is needed here. They saw that the exhibit in Chattanooga has tended to make that city a manufacturing center, and that a similar exhibit here would have an even more important effect. It is their purpose to urge the establistment of a permanent exhibit in Atlanta which would tend to make this city the market place of the south.



SWIMMING at Piedmont lake has become the popular pastime. From early morning until late evening the lake is merry with bathers. Many have adopted a stated routine of swimming, and as a result are deriving much benefit. Those who prefer an early morning dip, have a swim before breakfast, and return with a vacation appetite and energy enough to make the day's work seem easy. Others have their swim in the later afternoon, and earn a sound night's sleep. But there is never a time of the day when the pleasure of swimming at Piedmont isn't being enjoyed. The effect of the lake has been to provide the city with a new playground, a place of recreation that has long been needed. It seems now that the city never could have done without Piedmont lake. It is a means of increasing both the pleasure and the health of Atlanta. During the week, the lake is open throughout the day to all swimmers. The only restrictions made are as to the sort of bathing suits used. One-piece bathing suits and silk suits are prohibited.

The three little dogs are just "purps."

PERHAPS no sight arouses a greater spirit of patriotism than a gathering of veterans as they start for a reunion. It is a time when the Old South speaks to the New, and her words are heeded.

"Our Mascot" in the center of this group, and the drummer to the right of him, deserved their central position. For days before the reunion in Chattanooga they marched the streets of Atlanta to advertise the event. They became a familiar sight, and one that stirred much sympathy.

The men of this group fought in some of the most famous engagements of the Civil war. They endured great privations, and they were equal to any sacrifice in behalf of the south.

MIKE AND IKE—THEY LOOK ALIKE — by R. L. GOLDBERG

WHEN MIKE AND IKE WERE IN THE FOURTH GRADE, THE TEACHER ASKED THE CLASS THE FOLLOWING QUESTION:

IF AN AUTOMOBILE IS GOING AT THE RATE OF SIXTY MILES AN HOUR THROUGH A TOWN THAT COVERS 865 SQUARE MILES AND CONTAINS 60,000 PEOPLE, HALF OF WHOM ARE ENGAGED IN THE FISH BUSINESS AND IF THE MAYOR'S BIRTHDAY FALLS ON THE 18TH OF SEPTEMBER, WHAT IS THE COLOR OF THE CHAUFFEUR'S HAIR?

MIKE AND IKE ANSWERED "IT ALL DEPENDS ON WHETHER OR NOT THE PASSENGERS IN THE AUTOMOBILE WORE GLASSES."

JUST THEN A FIRE BROKE OUT IN THE SCHOOL-HOUSE AND MIKE AND IKE HAVE NOT BEEN BACK SINCE TO FIND OUT IF THEIR ANSWER WAS CORRECT.
